—The vault excitement having abated the people are, Micawber like, waiting for something else to turn up. We are making arrangements to get up a first-class concert for the benefit of the church. It is going to be a good thing, and we expect a big crowd.

Our literary society is increasing in numbers. Their debate on Wednesday evening was a rich literary treat. The subject of the discussion was whether the execution of Charles I. was justifiable or not. If Charles could have made his second appearance on earth and heard this debate he would have insisted on a second decapitation. Mr. Rufus Owens acted as umpire and his decisions were Solomon-like in their nature.

paired to their future home, the Dominion Hotel. The following handsome presents were received by the bride:—Gold watch and chain from her husband; two silver butter coolers, one silver cresset stand, four silver napkin rings, one silver cake basket, one Oriental lamp, one set of majolica ware, two sets of vases, a dozen silver forks, a dozen silver spoons, silver butter knife, a set of English glassware and a magnificent easy chair, and others too numerous to mention. Charlie is one of the boys, and a right good fellow, while his wife possesses all the attributes which go to make a faithful and loving wife, and feeling certain of their future happiness we take genuine pleasure in extending our congratulations and best wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Douglass.

WEDNESDAY.—Beaver Lake was the scene of a very spirited race to-day between two horses owned by Messrs. Mace and Knight. The ice was in excellent condition and both horses ran well. The race resulted in a victory for Mr. Knight's horse. Time, three-quarter-mile track, 2:50.... A party from Napanee, composed principally of members of the Napanee band, gave an excellent performance in the town hall this evening, in the form of a variety show. The programme opened with the old time circle, Mr. Vane acting as interlocutor and Messrs. Schryver and Osman as end men. After the olio a variety of songs and some excellent music were given, and the entertainment wound up with the mirth-provoking farce, "The Ghost in the Pawn Shop." The entertainment was first-class in every respect, and the company were greeted with their just dues—a large and appreciative audience. The boys deserve great credit for their undertaking and are altogether deserving of a good patronage at the entertainment they will give in Napanee on the 4th. Mr. C. Bruton acted as musical director.

THURSDAY.—An oyster supper under the auspices of the A. O. U. W. was given in the town hall this evening. It was well patronized and a good musical and literary programme was rendered, and as the oysters were of the very best quality and the audience in the best of spirits, no wonder it was a grand success.... It was rumored that there was to be telephone communication between the Dominion Hotel and the Wheeler House, but they have abandoned the idea, having made somewhat "different arrangements."

FRIDAY.—SATURDAY.—The boys are to brace up for work after the past week of high carnival. LEARY O'GAFF.

MONDAY.—On Monday evening last a happy wedding party arrived at Tamworth from Centreville to spend their honeymoon. The bride was accompanied by her sister, and the party put up at "Uncle Luke's." When the evening was far advanced (7 p. m.) the newly made man and wife were assigned to the bridal chamber in the north wing, while the sister-in-law occupied No. 2 off the parlor. Owing to the laughter and merriment of some railway officials in the parlor the young lady became frightened, and flew out of her bed-room, revolver in hand, and took refuge with her sister and brother-in-law, where she tarried the remainder of the night. The party returned to their homes in Centreville the following morning by stage. No cards.

TUESDAY.—The wedding on Tuesday evening of Mr. Charles Douglass, proprietor of the Dominion Hotel, and Miss Stella, youngest daughter of Mr. Luke Wheeler, of the Wheeler House, was a gala affair. A large crowd gathered in the English church at 8:30 p. m. to witness the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. Mr. Serson. The audience was waiting, anxious and expectant, for the fatal (?) moment, when presently gay bells were heard from without and in a short time Mr. Chas. Knight, groomsmen, led Miss Perry, bridesmaid, up the left-hand aisle, while up the right aisle came Mr. Chas. Douglass, husband-elect, and Miss Stella Wheeler, accompanied by her father, the Mendlessohn Wedding March ringing merrily from the organ. The bride was given away by her father, and after the ceremony had been performed was led triumphantly down the aisle by the happy husband. The friends and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Douglass adjourned to the Wheeler House, where a sumptuous supper was partaken of. That evening the bridal party re-

The programme, which was a varied one, consisting of dialogues, tableaux, vocal and instrumental music, was well carried out. The Blue Ribbon brass band of Sydenham enlivened the entertainment by rendering several choice selections. The chief feature of the entertainment was the dialogue entitled, "Strategy," in which Miss Minnie McLean took the leading part. As an amateur actress Miss McLean can scarcely be surpassed. Miss Annie Wagar, of Napanee, presided at the organ and played the accompaniments very nicely indeed. Too much praise cannot be given to the young people of Harrowsmith, who always take the lead in concerts. The proceeds, which netted the handsome sum of nearly $60, were devoted to charity.

REEVESHIP.—Mr. Files having resigned the Reeveship the citizens have been for some time looking up their men and doing a little electioneering on the sly. At present two men are spoken of as candidates—Mr. D. B. Stickney, who will be the champion of the non-billiard party, and Dr. A. K. Aylsworth, representing the interests of the billiard party. Both are good men and will do well, but both cannot win, and as it is a question of morality we shall soon know the basis on which this little village stands. The billiard party argue that saloons and pool tables are of great benefit to the place, that they keep young men from the hotels, that they know men who have not been drunk since it was established and that the proprietor has taken in nearly eight hundred dollars, which would have gone into the coffers of the hotel-keepers, and that other places have billiard saloons. The anti-billiard party argue that it is the half-way house to the hotel, that young men who were never known to go to the hotel are seen going to the billiard rooms, that many men of whom it was said they had never been on a spree it can be said no longer, that they can play for drinks, that liquor may be taken into it, that fights take place in the back yard, that empty bottles are found there, and that the greater part of the earnings of young men who never drank go to pay for playing on the pool table. Next Friday will be nomination day and a week from that date polling day, when it will be decided.

THE U. E. LOYALISTS CENTEN- ARY.

Speech of Rev. R. S. Forneri at Toronto.

At the U. E. Loyalist meeting in Toronto on Feb. 19th, Rev. R. S. Forneri, of Adol-phustown, delivered the following able speech:—

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen:

I feel rather awkward in rising to address
this meeting, as I am not a descendant of a U. E. Loyalist, nor a commissioned delegate from the place in which I live, but have come here simply from personal regard for, and interest in, loyalist matters. However, from what I know of the feeling in Adolphustown,
I may take upon myself to say that the people are favorable to the proposed celebration in Toronto. While they naturally desire to have a local celebration on the spot where their forefathers landed, they regard the capital of Ontario as the proper place for the provincial celebration. I must say I very much regret that there are no delegates present here to-night from Adolphustown, because it has been asserted that loyalism in that neighbourhood is "twice dead and plucked up by the roots." But loyalism is not dead in Adolphustown, though it may have been in a state of suspended animation.
Loyalism was not dead there in 1866, the year of the Fenian raid, and why should it be so now? Upon a memorable Sunday in that year an officer rode into the village and announced that a company of men was wanted for service at the front immediately. It was 8 o'clock in the morning when the summons came and at 11 o'clock almost all the adult males in the township were ready to march. That same afternoon they filed into Kingston, a motley band to look at—some on small horses, some on large ones, some in uniform and some not, some with arms and some with none. It was a troop at which friends might smile but enemies tremble, for every man of them was ready to do and die for his country. The truth is that loyalism has been slumbering throughout the country as a sentiment, while as an operative principle it has ever made itself felt in every nerve and fibre of the land and in all national movements and developments; and it has been in abeyance as a sentiment simply because there has been nothing for years past to rouse it or to call it forth. When Jona-

ACCIDENT ON THE G. T. R.

A Train Falls Through Smith's Creek Bridge.

Monday morning about 7 o'clock a freight train drawn by engine No. 202, going east broke through the bridge over Smith's Creek in North Fredericksburgh, about three and a half miles from town. The accident was caused, it is said, by a broken wheel. The engine, tender and one car passed over safely but the adjoining fourteen cars loaded with lumber, corn, flour, farming implements, etc., were precipitated in the ditch.
The last two cars, the van and a box car, remained on the track. The bridge was a complete wreck and the cars were smashed into kindling wood. Old railway men say it was the worst smash-up that they had seen for a long time. Four auxiliary trains were promptly despatched from Kingston and Belleville with a large gang of men and the whole day was occupied in clearing away
the debris and constructing a new bridge.
This was accomplished by 7 o'clock in the evening, when traffic was resumed. In the meantime all traffic was stopped. The two express trains from the west were detained here while other trains were standing at Kingston. It is very fortunate that the accident did not occur to a passenger train
as the loss of life would have been terrible.
At this point it is down grade and trains run very rapidly. The high rate of speed no doubt accounts for the complete demolition of the cars. The loss to the Railway Company will be very heavy.

The Excelsior Concert.

The concert given under the auspices of the C. M. Church, on Tuesday evening last was of a very high order and was listened to

(Episcopal) Toronto; Miss Berryman, contralto, also connected with one of the English Church choirs of that city; Mr. Fred.
Warrington, baritone, Toronto; Mr. Chas.
Pearson, tenor, Toronto, and Miss Burton, of Kingston. The programme was opened with a quartette, "Song of the Triton," by Mrs.
Bradley, Miss Berryman, Mr. Pearson and Mr.
Warrington, which was a fitting introduc-

The Blue Ribbon brass band of

ed for service at the front immediately. It was 8 o'clock in the morning when the summons came and at 11 o'clock almost all the adult males in the township were ready to march. That same afternoon they filed into Kingston, a motley band to look at—some on small horses, some on large ones, some in uniform and some not, some with arms and some with none. It was a troop at which friends might smile but enemies tremble, for every man of them was ready to do and die for his country. The truth is that loyalism has been slumbering throughout the country as a sentiment, while as an operative principle it has ever made itself felt in every nerve and fibre of the land and in all national movements and developments; and it has been in abeyance as a sentiment simply because there has been nothing for years past to rouse it or to call it forth. When Jonathan Jones threw down his paper and rushed out of his house with his double-barrelled gun in his hand, his wife rushed after him and caught him by the coat-tails saying, "You old fool you, (this was her ordinary term of endearment) what are you going to do with that thing? Are you going to blow your head off?" J. Jones drew himself up to his full height and answered, "On yonder woodshed I am going to fire a national salute." The fact was that Jonathan had just read that Sebastopol was taken, the Russian war was over and that British arms were triumphant, and in an instant he was filled with patriotic ardor, which had to expend itself in firing a salute from the highest point of his woodshed. But who that had seen Jonathan that morning quietly sawing wood in his back yard and submitting to be called an "old fool" by his better half, would ever have thought that there was in him a spark of patriotic sentiment to kindle his bosom. And so, Mr. Chairman, the demonstrations of June next will rouse all the slumbering loyalism of the country and prove what vitality and power it has even as a sentiment.

I must before sitting down thank his worship the Mayor for referring so kindly in his letter to proposed local celebrations at a distance. I do not think they need clash in the least with the provincial celebration to which I wish the most complete success. In conclusion I may venture to do one thing in the name of Adolphustown, though not a delegate, and that is to invite all here present and the citizens of Toronto generally to attend our June celebration. I am sure if you do you will receive a hearty welcome, and although I cannot promise you as imposing a demonstration as, no doubt, Toronto will have, you will find there what you will value far above all glitter and show—an honest and hearty attachment to the principles for which the old Loyalists fought and suffered the loss of all things, and devotion to the great Empire to which we belong. (Applause.)

Death of Dr. C. H. Lavell.

Dr. C. H. Lavell, of Kingston, well known in this county, died on Monday last. The deceased was one of Kingston's most gifted young men, and in his profession would have taken very high rank. As it was he was without a rival in the treatment of the eye and ear, and he had a practice which was not confined to the city of Kingston. His fatal ailment was inflammation of the bowels, from which he suffered greatly.

PECK'S BAD BOY AND HIS PA.

The Excelsior Concert.

The concert given under the auspices of the C. M. Church, on Tuesday evening last was of a very high order and was listened to by one of the largest audiences that has yet assembled in the new Opera House. The leading contributors were three members of the Toronto Philharmonic Society, Mrs. Bradley, soprano, late of St. Peter's choir; (Episcopal) Toronto; Miss Berryman, contralto, also connected with one of the English Church choirs of that city; Mr. Fred. Warrington, baritone, Toronto; Mr. Charles Pearson, tenor, Toronto, and Miss Burton, of Kingston. The programme was opened with a quartette, "Song of the Triton," by Mrs. Bradley, Miss Berryman, Mr. Pearson and Mr. Warrington, which was a fitting introduction to a rich musical treat. Misses Aylsworth and Helen Daly followed with a well executed instrumental, "Midsummer Night's Dream." Mr. Pearson sang "Bright Star of Love" very acceptably. He has a pleasant, well trained voice, though not of great compass. A charming duet, "Master and Scholar" was exquisitely sung by Mrs. Bradley and Mr. Warrington, who captivated the audience, and an encore was demanded, which was responded to. Miss Berryman sang "Good-Bye" in sweetest strains and the succeeding number was taken by Mr. Warrington, who sang "Sailing" in capital style. By this time Mr. Warrington had won the good opinion of the audience and was vociferously cheered. He responded with a comic song which he rendered in an inimitable style, showing that he has in addition to a finely trained voice a keen sense of the ridiculous in human nature. So mirth provoking was this effort that he was a second time recalled. Mrs. Bradley succeeded him and gave her first solo. It was the scena and aria "Softly Sighs" from the opera of "Der Freischutz", a difficult composition but which, nevertheless, was well executed. She was encored and gracefully responded. Mrs. Bradley not only possesses a fine voice, but an attractive presence and throws into her selections proper expression. The first part was concluded by Miss Berryman and Mr. Pearson in a duet, "Only Thee." The opening number of the second part was taken by Mr. Warrington, "Alone in the Desert," his best contribution, again winning the plaudits of the audience. Miss Williams and Miss Blanche Williams executed an instrumental duet most charmingly. Mrs. Bradley sang the ever popular Scotch ballad, "Within a Mile of Edinboro' Town" in her best voice and scored another success. As an encore she gave "Home, Sweet Home". This good old melody of which the people will never grow tired was never better sung here. The audience were made to see, in its sweet strains, new beauties, and as a result she was loudly applauded. Mr. Pearson sang "If" and gave place to Miss Burton, who was most enthusiastically received. Her contributions were warmly applauded, which went to show that her great popularity with Napanee audiences is growing, rather than diminishing. Miss Berryman sang "Farwell," and Mrs. Bradley, Mr. Pearson and Mr. Warrington rendered the "Laughing Trio" most acceptably. A quartette, "Good Night," from the opera of Martha, and the National Anthem brought a most enjoyable evening's entertainment to a close. The accompanists were Misses Sills and Williams.

Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

Mr. Files having resigned the office of citizens have been for some time in the city and doing a little electioneering. At present two men are candidates—Mr. D. B. Stickney, the champion of the non-billiard party, and A. K. Aylsworth, representing the billiard party. Both are well known to the people, but both cannot win. The question of morality we shall soon see on which this little village is divided. The billiard party argue that saloons are of great benefit to the place, and that young men from the hotels, that are in who have not been drunk since they were born, and that the proprietor has been paying eight hundred dollars, which he has put into the coffers of the hotel, that other places have billiard saloons, and that the billiard party argue that it is better to have the hotel, that young men never known to go to the hotel are the billiard rooms, that many men as said they had never been on a billiard table, that they can play at billiard on the pool table, that they can play in the back yard, that empty and there, and that the greater number of young men who never pay for playing on the pool table, will be nomination day and a week to polling day, when it will be decided.

PECK'S BAD BOY AND HIS PA.

The Old Man Buys a New Suit.

"Did you see pa's new suit of clothes?" asked the bad boy as he came into the store and held a biscuit under the molasses tap. "Yes," said the groceryman, as he charged the boy's father with a quart of molasses; "your folks are getting mighty tony. Your pa looks like a churchwarden at a vestry meeting. Where did he get them clothes? Has there been a fire?" "No, there wasn't any fire, nuther. Pa don't have to burn down folks' stores to get a new suit; betcher life he don't. He got 'em at McAlister's, and it don't cost a fortin' to get a suit there, nuther. My ma gave him $10, and sent him down to McAlister's, and just look at the consequences. He's too respectable for anything. Oh! he's a regular dude, pa is. When ma saw him come in she felt as if there was company in the house an' she made me go an' wash my nek, an' it's bin scar ever since. When bedtime come you'd a dide to see ma leading him to the spare bedroom an' hopin' he'd sleep well an' not blow out the gas. Pa sed he was afeared he was puttin' her to too much trouble, but ma sed she was only too glad to have a gentleman in the house, an' when I snickered ma slapped me an' sed, 'Be a good by, an' maybe I will buy you a new suit when I get to be financial minister of the sewin' society.' This is about the biggest indocement I've had to be good, an' I guess I'll try; betcher life I will." And the bad boy went out and hung up a sign which read: "Folks Wearin' McAlister's Close 'Can Git' There Groceries Fur Nothin'."

Awfully Sudden End.

Belleville, Feb. 25.—Yesterday afternoon Rev. Sheldon Young, one of the oldest superannuated ministers in the Methodist Episcopal Church, dropped dead. He drove to the city to consult a physician concerning his ill health, and when crossing the railroad bridge a neighbor observed him loose the reins and drop his head. Help arrived to find life extinct and to keep the corpse from falling out of the cutter. Mr. Young was troubled with dropsy for a number of years, and his friends suppose that it reached his heart.

WOMAN'S GOSSIP.

A New Field for Women.

More and more do the women of the present day incline to the avocations and amusements of what used to be called the sterner sex. Latterly, says the St. James' Gazette, it would seem that they have taken to the pursuit of burglary. Miss Rosette Lovell and Miss Ada Lawrence have been brought up at the Southwark police court charged with being concerned, with certain male persons, in various felonious entries into dwelling-houses, and from the evidence it would seem that the ladies took a no less active part than the gentleman. Disguising their charms under billy-cock hats and black beards, and doubtless accommodated with the friend and companion of the modern burglar, a well-made revolver, these fair ones asserted the rights of woman by cracking cribs with neatness, courage, and dexterity. However, it may be hoped that no chivalrous feelings toward their sex and youth (Rosette is of the romantic age of 20, though, perhaps, she could scarcely be described as "sweet") will save them from the rigors of the law if they are convicted. Ladies who break into houses belonging to other people must be treated even more severely than those, who, like a young person who also figured lately at the metropolitan police-court, drown the remembrance of slighted love by firing pistols from railway-carriage windows on the public at large.

Women More Daring than Men.

But women are always more daring than men, exclaims the San Francisco Chronicle. When they want to do anything they will endure as no man will to accomplish their ends. A woman has a very clear idea of what she is entitled to and what she may with safety claim. She can not go to a dog-fight, or a wrestling-match, or a slugging encounter, although she would like to. But she can bully a man if he does not do what she is entitled to. She can make a car-conductor's hair turn gray in the distance of a block. She can, and enjoys doing it, drive the most patient store-keeper to the verge of insanity. She is capable of going down town sixteen times to change a paper of pins. Those things everybody knows. But if one wants to see the woman in her highest state of independence and aggression against man, let him go and quietly look on at a matinee at the theatre. When a woman takes her seat there is no power on earth that will induce her to budge. If one comes late and has to pass a dozen others to get to her seat she knows what she has to expect. She does not attempt to apoloquite as hungry after marriage as before. Cupid is a young gentleman that must be well fed. "Love in a cottage" seems all sunshine and honeysuckles, but rent and taxes and soap, soda and sandpaper, however vulgar and sublunary, must all be duly provided for. So when you come to a settlement it often proves a settler indeed. Instead of money the gentleman has expectations, and is "looking out for something to do," he has "a rich uncle who may die," or a bronchitic aunt not expected to wheeze and cough through another winter. You may have offers enough of this sort, just as the servant-maid has when she comes into her quarter's wages. Pray, madam, beware of all such; have no younger sons or younger brothers about your premises. Curates are very dangerous—no good themselves, they keep others off. As to dashing young officers, few can say, in the words of 'poor Miss Bailey,' 'I've got a £1 note in my regimental small clothes.' So be guarded and distant; let us recommend a cast of countenance like a builder's notice board—"No admittance except on business." But do not aim too high. The higher you aspire the less your chance, till at last it ends at a vanishing point. Just take a pencil and draw a pyramid, a cone, or a tall triangle. Take a slice of the base, and it is a very wide slice; this represents the comparative number of the striving men of business, and among them most ladies proper will succeed. But this might be a little 'come down,' while every slice above represents a class smaller and smaller, literally fine by degrees and elegantly less. But beware of one danger. The higher you aspire the lower you may sink, with a great blot on your family escutcheon. Lord Burleigh truly said, 'Marry your daughters early or they will marry themselves,' and choose, in their despair, a partner for life even lower than the lowest you could have proposed to them."

Four of a Kind.

A rustic looking man sat in the smoking car of an Omaha train last Tuesday night, when another rural-looking person came in.

"Is this seat taken?" asked the newcomer.

"No, sir, sit down; sit right down," said the other, making room next him.

Soon the two old farmers were in conversation.

"Where are you from?"

"I live near Buda. Where do you hail from?"

"I'm a pretty near neighbor of yours I live near Kewanee."

"Farming?"

"Yes. Are you?"

"Yes; farming and stock?"

"Been to town with stock?"

When a woman takes her seat there is no power on earth that will induce her to budge. If one comes late and has to pass a dozen others to get to her seat she knows what she has to expect. She does not attempt to apologize or to implore—she simply walks over them, and they make her if she doesn't want to. It is quite possible the seat does not belong to her. She never comes out until the performance is over, even if the owner has to sit in the aisle. She will go and take a vacant seat in the front row if she sees it, and when the usher asks for her check she will calmly inform him that she will keep the seat till the owner comes. When the owner does come possession is ten points of the law and the usher wilts.

Canadian and American Beauty.

A good deal is being said at present about the comparative beauty of English and American women. Lord Coleridge, it seems, gives the palm for both beauty and intellect to the Americans. Sir Lepel Griffin, on the other hand, is strongly in favor of the English and Canadians, and in this connection mentions Toronto ladies as very generally noticeable for good looks and fresh, healthy complexions. Sir Lepel is inclined to attribute a great deal of this superiority which he assigns to the English and Canadian sisterhood partly to climatic influences, and still more to the habits of every-day life generally prevalent. He says that both English and Canadian ladies take far more out-door exercise in a great variety of specified ways, do a great deal more walking, and busy themselves more in the activities of benevolent and religious exercises.

There is a great deal of truth in all this. Persons shut up for the most part of a long, cold winter in hot and comparatively ill-ventilated houses, with scarcely anything but what, as if in mockery, is called, "carriage exercise," must soon have a bleached and delicate appearance, which passes speedily from the attractiveness of

"I'm a pretty near neighbor of yours I live near Kewanee."

"Farming?"

"Yes. Are you?"

"Yes; farming and stock?"

"Been to town with stock?"

"Yes: brought up a hundred head of steers."

"I brought hogs."

And so the conversation ran on until just before the train reached Mendota, and the two old farmers were right well acquainted. Presently another man who looked like a merchant came in, and was surprised to see one of the old farmers.

"Well, well, well," said the new man, "I'm glad to see you; maybe you can help me out of a little embarrassing trouble. I want to pay a man a little on train before I get off at Mendota and I haven't money enough. If you will let me have $100 on my check I'll be very much obliged."

"Certainly, I'm glad to do it," and out came the farmer's pocketbook. But, alas! he had only $40 in small bills and a beautiful, crisp $500 bill."

"You're perfectly welcome to the $40 if that'll help you out, or to the $500 if you can get it broke."

"Perhaps your friend can help us out; the $40 will hardly answer," said the merchant, and then he apologised for making so much trouble.

"Well," softly said the other farmer who until now had been silently looking on, "I can't change a $500 bill, but I can give you another one for it, and I think it came out of the same batch and was printed on the same press."

And turning to the other old farmer he added: "If your partner hadn't come just as he did mine would have been here in a minute. I've been getting ready to work on that same game ever since we left Chicago."

At Mendota four very much disgusted confidence men stepped off the train and stood around in the cold waiting for the next train returning to Chicago.

The Ladies of Berlin.

The ladies of Berlin are painted in most unflattering colors by M. Vasili in his paper on Berlin society in the present number of the Nouvelle Revue. As a general rule, he says, the Berlin woman of the upper classes neither reads nor works nor occupies herself in any useful way. She passes her existence in gossip and in the frivolities of the toilet. She has not two serious ideas in her head, nor two elevated feelings in her mind. Her preferences are vulgar, her influence insignificant. She lacks grace, education, and tact. She tries to ape Frenchwomen as well as she can, but she only succeeds in reproducing their defects. It is impossible to make her converse, so little does she know of what is going on in the world, so completely is she absorbed in admiring herself and criticising her rivals. The morality of the married ladies is, according to M. Vasili, no higher than the standard presented by the average French novel. In short, Berlin society has, if we are to accept this account for it, all the vices of the French society of the last century without the redeeming wit and grace.

Some Advice to Mothers.

An experienced old lady used to say: "Don't tell me about engagements, love, and attachments, and all that, till you can report that they have been in and out of the lawyer's office." People can't live upon air, observes London Society, and to see some of them, even at a wedding breakfast, you will find that they are

A party of Baptist clergymen were bluefishing off Martha's Vineyard the other day. A question arose as to whether a certain specimen was really a bluefish. "We call 'em Baptists," said a native fisherman. The Baptist clergyman rather eagerly asked why. "Case they spile so soon arter they're taken out 'o the water."

It was a Boston clergyman who recently impressively remarked that, "men thought all others mortal but themselves," and he added with considerable solemnity that "they frequently looked in the newspaper for the record of the deaths of friends and acquaintances, but never once thought of looking in the papers for the announcement of their own decease."

The Excelsior Rupture treatment was introduced to the American people several years ago in such a manner as to completely secure the confidence of the whole nation. The mode of introduction was by furnishing the remedy to those afflicted with Hernia in any of its various forms and collecting no pay until a permanent cure was effected. In this way the treatment gained a world-wide reputation on its own merits; never failing to cure any reducible Hernia. The Company has at the solicitation of thousands placed the remedy on sale by all druggists, both wholesale and retail, in the United States, Canada and England. In this way bringing it within the reach of all classes at a trifling cost compared with the benefits which are derived from the use of the treatment. The evidence produced to establish the superior claims of FLAX-SEED EMULSION COMPOUND as a remedy for Nervous exhaustion and all its symptoms is unquestionable. The large and increasing demand is almost entirely due to its own merits. We do not place it in competition with patent medicines or secret remedies, as we furnish the formula and can show that it consists of a superior combination of phosphorus, with the fat-producing properties of the Flax-Seed. During the past six months over FOUR THOUSAND BOTTLES have been dispensed in the city of Ogdensburg, N. ## CHIT-CHAT.

The cruise of the Duke of Edinburgh in the Mediterranean separates him from his family for six months.

An 11-year-old boy in Corydon, Ind., committed suicide because his parents refused to let him eat at first table.

If you have a fondness for telling bad things, begin with yourself; if for repeating good deeds, begin with your neighbor.

"My dear," said a dying husband to his wife, "when I am dead will you see that my grave is kept green?" "Yes," sobbed the heart-broken woman, "I will for a little while."

Our bookkeeper, who has taken a lively interest in this Egyptian business, says that the accounts are balanced thus: England—All loss and no profit. Mehdi—All prophet and no less.

Lemuel Whisten, near Enterprise, tied a halter around his neck and hitched himself to his waggon. He then scared the horses and made them run. Whisten's young wife had died but a few weeks before.

A lady, a regular shopper, who had made an unfortunate clerk tumble over all the stockings in the store, objected that none were long enough. "I want," she said, "the longest hose that are made." "Then, madam," was the reply, "you had better apply at the next engine-house."

An effort is being made in New York to have the church bells silenced. A man who attends a dog-fight or a slugging-match on Saturday night, and doesn't get into bed till 2 o'clock Sunday morning, naturally dislikes to have his slumbers disturbed by the clanging of a church bell a few hours later.

Robert P. Pullman, of Carnesville, Ga., publishes this card in the local paper: "I hereby give notice to all dram sellers and dram drinkers that I have left the old way with the old year, and have turned into the new way with the new year, and I want all of them to give me the go by. I intend to redeem my name and character, and shall look upon the man that offers me liquor as my deadly enemy."

"What do circus people do in the winter?" asks a contemporary. The clown devotes the season to gleaming a fresh crop of jokes from the almanacs printed prior to the American revolution, and occasionally writes for the London comic weeklies; and the "strong man," who splinters rocks with his fist, secures employment in a cheap boarding house at hammering tough beef. No doubt the others find employment adapted to their respective talents.

Capt. Webb's widow is now compelled to maintain herself and her family by cultivation and to good transportation facilities, and the farmers in England will find times worse for them than ever before. With unprofitable wheat growing, and cattle raising threatened with serious foot-and-mouth diseases, many of the more enterprising of the English tenant farmers will, no doubt, transfer their homes to Canada. The sooner they do so the better for themselves. English landlords cannot again command such high rents and exacting lease terms as they have heretofore enjoyed.

Now that attention is being drawn towards the preservation of our forests, every suggestion of value ought to receive its full share of attention. The Week, our new literary contemporary, well says:—

"Appropos of the important question of the preservation of our forests, Canadians and Americans might profit by the experience of continental forestry schools and from the experiments carried out on the tree farms of Central Italy. Whole districts which had been stripped of timber on the Alps have been reforested, and in the Ardennes woods are systems of forest-farming which not only preserve the trees but make an excellent investment on the operation. A Belgian writer residing near Ardennes says the proprietors found that the land cultivated in trees and cut once in a hundred years—i. e. the trees being selected according to their condition, and cut at the rate of 1 per cent. per annum—paid just as well as raising wheat on the same extent of land. What is wanted, then, in our forest management, is the application of a vigorous system of intelligent official superintendence to the cutting of the trees, none but those marked for cutting to be allowed to be cut. This would pay even now as management, and in the course of the not long time which will see all our unregulated forests exhausted, the forests so controlled and policed would furnish an excellent investment for the capital employed in keeping them from present destruction. The lumberers now cut all the desirable trees as they go, littering the ground with an enormous mass of small branches and dead wood, which becomes as inflammable as powder. These never burn, but only scorch and kill the standing trees, and subside and spread by this litter of the lumbermen, who are utterly indifferent to what happens to the country when they have got their logs out."

Somebody has been taking observations about the men of weak knees against whom so many hard things are usually said. One of the results of his observations is the discovery that some of the men who have a good deal to say about firmness are foremost among the weak-kneed class. Ministers are put down as men of that stamp, generally, and editors might be usually put in the same category. Ministers have certainly very outspoken ways in regard to "sin," and the devil, and a good many other well known individuals whose reputations for wrong doing are well established, but there is often quite another spirit manifest when the horns of some friend of the church or the congregation happen to be in the way. Editors are worse yet. How valiant is the average party editor in denouncing the crookedness and the inconsistency of the members of the other party, but how few editors have the moral courage to breathe the first word of disapproval in regard to the meanest act a member of

THE AUSTRIAN THE

The Bloody Deeds of the Vipers Recapitulated—Operative Firm of Schenk Brothers—Sale Assassins—A Terrible Story.

It is a lamentable fact that human beings so diabolically and wickedly as almost to justify the theory of metempsychosis, and more probable that ravenous wild bloody, cruel, merciless—may temporarily inhabiting the form. That idea, however, is contrary to the spirit of Christianity, and may be regarded as unorthodox, if not pagan. Otherwise it would be reasonably for the existence of a monster of iniquity as Hugo head of a recently discovered class of Austrian murderers. Approaching almost any other point of view, moral degradation seems inexplicable, indeed, on the assumption independently of the transubstantiation of souls—an instinct more ferocious than that of the fiercest tiger and more subtle than that of the serpent lurk in the breast of a handsome looking gentleman. This same Hugo, his brother, and an accomplice, Schlossarek, are now in prison awaiting their trial; but, inasmuch as they have already confessed to many of their case is not likely to be precluded. They and their associates sued the calling of murder as a trade, and for the past three years lived luxuriously on the profits. The Schenks, Silesians by birth, sons of a judge, who caused to be well educated. They have the bearing of men of rank; and the arch-villain, is described as being some, gracious and accomplished by nature to please a young lady and win her love. At home, they behaved themselves, acquired such drunken and dissipated habits, that their father turned the doors—a hopeless disgrace to the family. How these two riotous young thrifts first took to the occupation is not known; but they have discovered that they associate themselves with Schlossarek, a confederate, and with several other bandits. It is not uncommon in Vienna for female domestic servants who have money to advertise for husbands in local papers; and Hugo Schenk, a married man living apart from his wife, to answer such advertisements, and under pretense of being an engaged man, receipt of a good salary, and once as a wealthy aristocrat with a high social position, for class prejudices. He would seduce girls by appointment, and afterwards court to them for a few days or weeks, and then duce the silly, trusting creature

No doubt the others find employment adapted to their respective talents.

Capt. Webb's widow is now compelled to maintain herself and her family by doing service as a book-keeper in a Boston book store. There is nothing discreditable to her in thus earning an honest living by honest industry; it is certainly much more creditable than passing round the hat among her husband's old friends and admirers, but it certainly is not very creditable to the man himself that he should so recklessly jeopardize his own life when he knew the position his wife and family would be placed in should his venture fail, as it did. Men who have given hostages to fortune are certainly not warranted in being reckless about health or personal safety. The unfortunate Captain was no doubt a very plucky man, and many admired him because of his pluck, but now that his wife is a widow the admiration of the world is of but precious little value.

Now that the question of how most effectually to prevent the possibility of railway accidents is receiving so much consideration, suggestions from all quarters are in order. A good deal of stress has been laid on the suggestion that telegraph operators ought to be constantly at their posts at every station, great and small. Of course the objection is that the expense of an efficient telegraph operator at all times at every small stopping place, would be very large and probably out of proportion to the actual importance of the work required. We would like to know if the telephone could not be conveniently supplied for many by-stations? The telephone does not require a skilled operator, and in the case of small crossings, the conductors and engine drivers could themselves make all necessary enquiries of those from whom information is needed. The telephone ought to be of great practical value in connection with small railway stations.

How valiant is the average party editor in denouncing the crookedness and the inconsistency of the members of the other party, but how few editors have the moral courage to breathe the first word of disapproval in regard to the meanest act a member of his own party may be guilty of? "Backbone" is an admirable thing to talk about but so far as we have ever observed, the real inflexible article is rarely to be found among men of any class. The man who often has most to say about it generally has the least of it in his possession.

New York Drinking Places.

The bar-tenders of these places about which I am writing are spruce young men who are not infrequently experts at mixing drinks. They are paid very comfortable salaries, and are neat and dexterous. They wear white linen coats and aprons, and are always scrupulously barbered. The utmost cleanliness is observable on all sides, and they are careful enough in mixing drinks to satisfy the most fastidious tastes. The slovenly, greasy and oily bar-tender who waxes his mustache and wears a diamond shirt stud is no longer found in New York. The proprietors of these avenue saloons seldom go behind the bar. They sit and talk with their friends. They too drift into politics early, and are the most influential men in their wards.

The proprietors of the Broadway shops are shrewd and quiet men of business. They don't dabble in politics at all, but content themselves with salting away fortunes every year. Such men as Dowd, Black, Stewart, Wildey, Morton, and Houghton clear all the way from $15,000 to $25,000 a year by their Broadway places. I was in one of these places one afternoon recently talking with the owner quietly, when he stopped and pointed to a man behind the bar. He was one of eight or ten bright-looking young bar-tenders. "Is your hat here?" asked the proprietor, looking him straight in the eye.

"Yes, sir," said the bar-tender somewhat apprehensively.

The proprietor took a card out of his pocket and wrote a few words on it.

"Take that to the cashier," he said:

The telephone ought to be of great practical value in connection with small railway stations.

The gallows has not been used in Erie County, Pa., for fifty years, public opinion having forbidden it since the hanging of Henry Francisco, then termed judicial murder. The Philadelphia Times tells the story as follows:—"On the 31st of March, 1832, Henry Francisco and his child-wife, Maud, only 16 years old, and only three weeks a wife, were found insensible in bed, with a bottle of poison by their side. Two letters, one in the hand of each, informed the friends that although united in marriage but three weeks they desired to enter eternity hand in hand. Medical assistance was promptly sought, but in less than an hour after discovery the beautiful girl breathed her last, and the efforts of the physicians were concentrated upon the purpose of saving the man's life. For hours his life hung in the balance, but finally their exertions were rewarded with success, and the life of Francisco was saved—saved that it might a few months later be taken on the gallows-tree amid the tears and groans of a sympathetic people and the prayers of two sobbing ministers of the Gospel."

The agricultural prospects in England are not, by any means, encouraging in their outlook. Wheat growing is carried on on a much smaller scale than it was years ago. It is said that there are now nearly 400,000 acres less of land under wheat than in previous years, and the prospects are for a further decline. Since wheat growing has commenced on so large a scale in the Western States and transportation has become so cheap, it is not possible for the English farmer, contending against a bad climate, wet harvest seasons, high rent and high taxes, to profitably compete in an open market. Soon the vast wheat fields of the great Northwest of Canada will be opened up to good most fastidious tastes. The slovenly, greasy and oily bar-tender who waxes his mustache and wears a diamond shirt stud is no longer found in New York. The proprietors of these avenue saloons seldom go behind the bar. They sit and talk with their friends. They too drift into politics early, and are the most influential men in their wards.

"Yes, sir," said the bar-tender somewhat apprehensively.

The proprietor took a card out of his pocket and wrote a few words on it.

"Take that to the cashier," he said; "get a week's pay in advance and leave at once. You can't stop in this place any longer."

"Why, what have I done?" asked the man defiantly.

"You rub your infernal mustache too much," said the proprietor. "I have watched you for the last half hour. You know it is the rule in this place that no man can touch his face with his hands. Customers don't want bar-tenders who are continually pulling their mustaches to mix drinks for them. That may strike you as being rather silly," said the proprietor to me, as the man went away, "but it isn't. It is by attending to the smallest details of this business that I have got it on a thoroughly successful basis. I have to watch the men like a bulldog, and it is wearing on my nerves."

After the Broadway places comes the Hoffman House, which is unquestionably the most magnificent bar-room in the world; Delmonico's, which is the best; the Fifth Avenue hotel which is the worst, and the Windsor and Brunswick, both of which are admirable. These places have a regular run of customers every night, and make a good deal of money. They are frequented by the best class of men in town, and comparatively little drinking is done over the bars.

There are no oaths in the Chinese language. When a Chinaman has his legs knocked from under him by a boy on a clipper, he probably hurries home and slams the door with thundering emphasis. There must be some way to give vent to his feelings.

It seemed over, that he intended giving up in his native country and crossing the sea with his mistress, a girl named Hoechsmann. Last autumn he left home for a fortnight, arranging to meet her at a coffee-house the same evening, and on that evening was the life and soul of the company, a merry fellow, brimming over with anecdote. Moreover this jocular companion and attentive lover was hungry, and ate heartily, excusing himself on the ground that he had been at work. However, as he said, he had not forgotten his sweetheart, and then made her a present of bracelets and rings. That Friday evening he had been at work that day is true, for his friends had shot a cook named Terl, stolen from her body the necklace she had given to Emily, and flung it into the Danube. It has been said above that this fiend in human shape was living apart from his wife, but his wife is at the present time—though he is still alive—remains a mystery somewhat of Hugo's stamp was seen at one time, from a passing train, struggling with a woman far from Lundenburg, on the Northern Railway of Austria. The police were sure they saw the male figure act of raising his arm to stab the woman with a dagger which he held in his hand, but when the police arrived at the scene indicated both were gone, leaving no trace behind. Hugo now admitted that he did murder a woman in that hood, but declines to say whether it was his wife or a stranger. There can never be very little doubt that he has great many women besides the one whose disappearance has been reported to the police. sale Assassins—A Terrible Story.

It is a lamentable fact that there are human beings so diabolically and desper- ately wicked as almost to justify the the- ory of metempsychosis, and make it seem probable that ravenous wild beasts— bloody, cruel, merciless—may be found temporarily inhabiting the forms of men. That idea, however, is contrary to the spirit of Christianity, and must be dis- carded as an orthodox, if not altogether pagan. Otherwise it would account reasonably for the existence of such a monster of iniquity as Hugo Schenk— head of a recently discovered confederacy of Austrian murderers. Approached from almost any other point of view, this man's moral degradation seems inexplicable, ex- cept, indeed, on the assumption that— independently of the transubstantiation of souls—an instinct more ferocious than that of the fiercest tiger and infinitely more subtle than that of the serpent may lurk in the breast of a handsome, fascina- ting gentleman. This same Hugo Schenk, his brother, and an accomplice named Schlossarek, are now in prison at Vienna, waiting their trial; but, inasmuch as they have already confessed to many homicides, their case is not likely to be prejudiced by comment. They and their assistants pur- sued the calling of murder as a regular trade, and for the past three years have lived luxuriously on the profits of blood. The Schenks, Silesians by birth, are the sons of a judge, who caused them to be well educated. They have the manners and bearing of men of rank; and Hugo, the arch-villain, is described as tall, hand- some, gracious and accomplished—as cal- culated by nature to please a young girl's fancy and win her love. At home, in Sil- esia, they behaved themselves so vilely, acquired such drunken and dissolute hab- its, that their father turned them out of doors—a hopeless disgrace to their family. How these two riotous young spend- thrifts first took to the occupation of mur- der is not known; but the authorities have discovered that they associated them- selves with Schlossarek, a confirmed crim- inal, and with several other bad charac- ters. It is not uncommon in Vienna female domestic servants who have saved money to advertise for husbands in the local papers; and Hugo Schenk—a mar- ried man living apart from his wife—used to answer such advertisements, sometimes under pretense of being an engineer in receipt of a good salary, and occasionally as a wealthy aristocrat with a contempt for class prejudices. He would meet the girls by appointment, and after paying court to them for a few days or weeks in- duce the silly, trusting creatures to draw rests, however, the Pesth authorities are anxious to have likenesses of the accused, as of late years several young women of that city have mysteriously disappeared, and in a manner which would suggest dealings with the Schenk establishment. Yet though, for the reasons named, the brothers found it more convenient and safer to limit their operations with a cer- tain rank of life, Hugo did not disdain to fly at higher game. There was a certain Rose Ferenczy, a woman of 30—imagina- tive, romantic—the illegitimate daughter of a Hungarian nobleman, and possessed of some means of her own. The villain laid regular siege to the poor lady's heart, per- suaded her to become his mistress, and occasionally visited her in the remote sub- urb where she lodged. Though Rosa Ferenczy was frightened of her lover, and during his frequent absences suspect- ed him of being a scoundrel, yet he had only to show himself, when all her fears and suspicions vanished. About Christ- mas time he took her to the opera and to the theatres, and must have promised marriage, for she said to her landlady, on going on a journey with him, as she supposed, to visit his sister, "You will see me happy and married or never again." Schlossarek was with them when they set off, and within twenty-four hours Mlle. Ferenczy's corpse was picked up in the Danube, near Presbourg. By that trans- action the firm netted 1,800 florins. The other partners, however, always com- plained that Hugo was a mean man, and did not make a fair distribution of the profits of the concern.

Had these Austrian thugs—incompar- ably more base than the worshippers of Rhowani—continued to conduct their frightful and abominable trade with or- dinary prudence they might be still at large, but one of them, having killed a servant-girl, had the audacity to take her bank-book to the post-office with the ob- ject of drawing the deposit to her credit. The woman had been missed. Suspicion was naturally aroused at the post-office, and the three principal members of the firm were consequently arrested. Of those who were at that time among the first on the Schenks' list, one is the daughter of respectable parents and

Hugo had induced this girl to steal a string of pearls from her mistress, valued at 20,000 florins, and he had actually concocted a plan to murder the woman herself, the baroness, and all the household within a few hours of his arrest. have discovered that they associated them- selves with Schlossarek, a confirmed crim- inal, and with several other bad chara- cters. It is not uncommon in Vienna female domestic servants who have saved money to advertise for husbands in the local papers; and Hugo Schenk—a married man living apart from his wife—used to answer such advertisements, sometimes under pretense of being an engineer in receipt of a good salary, and occasionally as a wealthy aristocrat with a contempt for class prejudices. He would meet the girls by appointment, and after paying court to them for a few days or weeks induce the silly, trusting creatures to draw their money out of the bank; and, so provided, accompany him on a journey to get married. His lying tale was always care- fully prepared and plausible—one not likely to attract suspicion, particularly in a country like Austria, where the rela- tions between the sexes are notoriously free to a fault. The victim thus secured, the handsome Hugo Schenk would get out at some romantic spot, where he had arranged that his accomplices should be in readiness, and together they would STRANGLE OR SHOOT THE GIRL.

Secure her property, conceal her body and return quietly to town, as if nothing had happened, to plan fresh murders and to carry on their regular business of killing.

The gang laid their schemes in the most methodical manner, and sometimes had several projected homicides in hand at once. Hugo has confessed to having planned five murders for last week alone, which he reckoned would have yielded a profit of 30,000 florins. It seems, more over, that he intended giving up business in his native country and cross to America with his mistress, a girl named Emily Hoechsmann. This girl did not know how he got his money until the day of the arrest, when she offered herself as a wit- ness for the prosecution. It appears that Emily Hoechsmann herself had in the first place been marked for slaughter; but Hugo, finding her very poor as well as very pretty, spared her, and persuaded her to live with him as his wife. One day last autumn he left home for a few hours, arranging to meet her at a coffee garden the same evening, and on that occasion was the life and soul of the company—a merry fellow, brimming over with jest and anecdote. Moreover this jovial boon companion and attentive lover was very hungry, and ate heartily, excusing him- self on the ground that he had been hard at work. However, as he said, he had not forgotten his sweetheart, and there and then made her a present of a watch, bracelets and rings. That Hugo had been at work that day is true, for he and his friends had shot a cook named Ketterl, stolen from her body the trinket he had given to Emily, and flung her body into the Danube. It has been stated above that this fiend in human shape was living apart from his wife, but where the wife is at the present time—that is, if she

Such cold-blooded malignity is simply appalling, and to compare these devilish monsters with the sect which formerly practised thug- gee would be manifestly unfair, to the dark-skinned assassins for conscience sake. Indeed, we doubt whether the his- tory of crime records any villainies more horrible than theirs. Individual murders as bad as any of those done by the Aus- trian gang have certainly been committed, and hideous massacres of whole families, as in the case of Troppmann, but the Schenks and their accomplices killed again and again, in cold blood, for the sake of plunder. Sooner or later they must have come to the scaffold. One or more of the band would have been sure to betray the others. Homicide has, un- fortunately, been rife in England of late, and many mysterious murders remain un- accounted for. Nevertheless, such a long series of crimes of a particular kind as are charged against the accused in this case could not possibly take place here without leading to searching inquiries and consequent discovery. The firm of Schenk Brothers, wholesale assassins, could not, indeed, have traded anywhere, subject to the publicity of an active news- paper press. Hugo, the decoy, must con- stantly have been seen in company with his victims; and it seems very strange that the Austrian police were not able long ago to trace him and his accomplices to their place of business. That they will be executed is a matter of course. Yet an instant, sudden death seems too light a punishment for such detestable villains.—London Telegraph.

It was evening, after one of the greatest battles of the Rebellion. The surviving soldiers of the battle were fatigued, and glad to drop down almost anywhere to rest. Those who had been on the re- serve were caring for the dead and wound- ed, and in the hospital tent those who wore the blue, and those who wore the gray, were groaning with the wounds re- ceived in battle and were being treated by the Union physicians.

It has been stated above that this fiend in human shape was living apart from his wife, but where the wife is at the present time—that is, if she be still alive—remains a mystery. A man somewhat of Hugo's stamp was observed, at one time, from a passing railway train, struggling with a woman, not far from Lundenburg, on the Northern Railway of Austria. The passengers were sure they saw the male figure in the act of raising his arm to stab the female with a dagger which he held in his hand, but when the police arrived at the spot indicated both were gone, leaving not a trace behind. Hugo now admits that he did murder a woman in that neighborhood, but declines to say whether she was his wife or a stranger. There can, however be very little doubt that he killed a great many women besides those whose disappearance has been reported to the police. Two are accounted for in May, done to death after four week' courtship; and at the time the house of Schenk had

NO FEWER THAN FIFTY OTHERS ON THEIR BOOKS, with all of whom Hugo corresponded in lover-like terms, while the intimacy, which was to lead to their grave, ripened. As a rule, the gang preferred to deal with servant-girls, because, from the fact of their being in humble circumstance, and generally living away from their families and removed from early association in the country parts, it became comparatively easy to get rid of them without raising much of a hue-and-cry. ### The Sergeant's Vow.

It was evening, after one of the greatest battles of the Rebellion. The surviving soldiers of the battle were fatigued, and glad to drop down almost anywhere to rest. Those who had been on the reserve were caring for the dead and wounded, and in the hospital tent those who wore the blue, and those who wore the gray, were groaning with the wounds received in battle and were being treated by the Union physicians.

On the right hand and on the left, in front of them and in the rear, could be seen the dead bodies, dressed in the uniform of the friends and the foe.

They were just taking the coffee from the fire when a soldier came up, and discovering that the dozen men were of his company, said:

"How is it, boys, are you dry?"

"Trying to cook our coffee, Ned," said one of the soldiers, "but I guess that it will be Virginia mud and water mixed together."

"I've got something good," said the first speaker, producing his canteen which had hung across his shoulders.

"What is it?" asked one.

"Whiskey," replied Ned.

"You're a trump."

"That's jolly."

"That is just the stuff."

"That will revive us!"

And other expressions of satisfaction and pleasure were made by the men.

"Here, Sergeant," said Ned, reaching the canteen toward a tall, noble looking fellow who had been silent, "throw aside your temperance principles for once and take a drink."

"Not any, Ned, thanks," replied the one addressed as sergeant.

"Come, now, you have fought like a tiger all day. You do not know but what you may have to rally in five minutes."

"True, Ned, but excuse me."

"Not a drop!"

"Say, Sergeant," said Ned, "if it is agreeable to the boys, we will adjourn the drink for five minutes, and you tell us how you came to be such an infernal advocate of temperance."

"I second the motion," said another soldier.

"And so do I!"

"And I, too!"

"Well, boys," said the sergeant, "I will tell you. It is a short story, and therefore soon told. When I was nineteen I had to leave school, owing to the death of my father. I came home to help my mother, who needed me. My father had been a prosperous farmer; he had that frugality and sturdy industry characteristic of the Vermont farmers. My mother I always considered the most handsome woman on earth, at least appeared so to me and as a mother there never was one better.

"After my father had been dead about a year, somehow I acquired a passion for hunting, fishing and especially cooning. There was nothing that delighted me so much as it did to take my dog and go out with some of the neighboring boys and bring home a number of coons. One night three of our neighbors came to our house after me. They thought they had found a new place, a corn field, where there was plenty of game. I needed no urging. I kissed my mother good-by, told her that I would not be late, called my dog and away we went.

"One of the boys had a bottle of whiskey in his pocket. Just how it came about I do not know; I had drank a little whiskey before, but that night I drank too much, and became beastly drunk. The boys led me home and left me at the gate, I staggered through and staggered around the yard a little, in a vain attempt to find the steps to the house. I stumbled over something, fell down and was unable to get up. After a little I went to sleep—a regular drunken sleep.

"It seems that in the night, sometime, my mother became anxious because I did not come home. She had not been to bed but had fallen into a slumber upon the couch. She awoke, as I said before, some time in the night, and fearing that harm had befallen me arose from the couch, put her shawl over her head, and started out to find me. And she found me in a condition most deplorable, indeed. At first she thought I was dead, or that I had been brutally treated by a highwayman. But when she stooped down and looked at me and saw, by the moonlight, my face, she knew that her only child was drunk. She tried to waken me; she tried to get me into the house, but she had not the strength. She went to the house and got a pillow, and placed it under my head. ## A NIHILIST LEADER'S RETREAT.

The Home of Professor Pierre Lavroff in Paris.

At the summit of the Rue St. Jacques, some miles away from the centre of gaiety and fashion, and further even than the extreme limits of the Quartier Latin, lives the man of all others whom the Russian Government is most anxious to capture—Pierre Lavroff. Where the pavement is narrow, the streets always muddy, stands a house of more imposing aspect than the surrounding modest dwellings. But it is not here precisely that Lavroff has taken up his abode. We must pass under a large porte cochere, cross a broad yard to reach a smaller structure that stands well away from all the noise of the street, and ascend two flights of dusty stairs, before attaining Lavroff's door. A slight pull at a bell-rope that has seen better days suffices; and in a moment the door is opened by Lavroff himself.

Alone, and without even a servant to protect him, stands the man who exercises the greatest influence among the Nihilists that exile has scattered all over Europe. At once the memory of Fedora suggests the possibility of kidnapping; but then, in spite of his gray hairs, Lavroff seems as strong as Bradlaugh, and the Russian secret police could scarcely hope to remove so formidable an adversary down so many stairs, across so broad a yard, into so busy a street, without attracting attention. The cheery voice, the cordial reception of the menaced exile soon drives away these passing thoughts, and we are at once admitted into the sanctum, a small study, where the four walls are hidden by long rows of books that reach to the ceiling.

There is one comfortable chair for the visitor. If the guests are numerous, then bundles have to be removed to make room; but this inconvenience does not detract from the hearty welcome that betokens the traditions of Northern hospitality. Nor is it possible to mistake the Russian origin of the host. A square face enframed by a square beard and long hair, square, broad shoulders, covered by a long coat of an indescribable gray-brown that reaches to the feet, combine with the military gait of the wearer to remind us of some sketch taken during the siege of Sebastopol. There is a small bedroom beyond the study, and on the other side a lumber-room, where we can obtain a glimpse at huge cases half filled with books. Perhaps these have been collected by the Russian Red Cross Society for the relief of political prisoners, of which Lavroff and Vera Sassoulitch are the joint Presidents.

In Russia he was the first professor who, after the accession of Alexander II., delivered lectures on philosophy; and when in exile, he organized classes at Paris for young Russians on history and sociology.

In the morning I awoke just as the sun was rising, I found her there. Great tears were chasing each other down her cheeks. I saw at once that my mother had cared for me all night. She had faithfully kept her lonely vigil, watching her drunken son, weeping and praying.

"'I am awful thirsty,' I said. My voice sounded strange, and unnatural. I got up ; my mother rose, went to the well and brought me a cup of water. As she handed the cup to me she bowed her head that I might not see her grief ; but I saw a tear come down her pale cheek and drop into that cup. I took the cup from her hand drank its contents, tear and all. Yes, boys, I drank my mother's tear, and I made a solemn vow that I never again would drink her tears.

"I led my mother into the house ; I led her to the arm chair ; and as soon as she was seated I got down upon my knees.

"'Mother' said I, 'This is the first. It shall be the last.'

"'Charles,' said she, running her fingers through my hair, 'I hope so. God bless you.'

"I looked up, and my mother had fainted. I took her in my arms, as one might take a child, and placed her upon a bed. It was the beginning of what came near being her death. Days, and nights, and weeks I was by that sick bed. I heard her, as her mind wandered, praying for me and pleading for my reformation. And at times she would imagine she was talking to my father. She would ception of the menaced exile soon drives away these passing thoughts, and we are at once admitted into the sanctum, a small study, where the four walls are hidden by long rows of books that reach to the ceiling.

There is one comfortable chair for the visitor. If the guests are numerous, then bundles have to be removed to make room ; but this inconvenience does not detract from the hearty welcome that betokens the traditions of Northern hospitality. Nor is it possible to mistake the Russian origin of the host. A square face enframed by a square beard and long hair, square, broad shoulders, covered by a long coat of an indescribable gray-brown that reaches to the feet, combine with the military gait of the wearer to remind us of some sketch taken during the siege of Sebastopol. There is a small bedroom beyond the study, and on the other side a lumber-room, where we can obtain a glimpse at huge cases half filled with books. Perhaps these have been collected by the Russian Red Cross Society for the relief of political prisoners, of which Lavroff and Vera Sassoulitch are the joint Presidents.

In Russia he was the first professor who, after the accession of Alexander II., delivered lectures on philosophy ; and when in exile, he organized classes at Paris for young Russians on history and sociology. The son of a nobleman, he was, as usual in Russia, placed in the army, but at the age of 22 he had already attained the position of professor of higher mathematics in the school of artillery. This was followed by the studies of physical sciences and the contribution of many able papers to the Russian reviews and press. It was not, however, till Lavroff became the principal editor and contributor to an encyclopædia which would give, in the Russian language, information similar in character to Diderot and D'Alembert's historic work, that he was molested by the Government. Sentenced for some verses written against Nicholas I. and Alexander II., he was exiled to the bleak and ice-bound province of Vologda ; but after three years' suffering he succeeded in eluding the vigilance of his guardians and ultimately arrived in Paris in 1870. Being a widower his mother alone followed him in exile ; but as she is now dead, Lavroff is absolutely alone. During the last sixteen years he has not only been separated from his children, but he has not dared to communicate with them for fear of compromising them.

Lavroff lives by his literary work ; it is his principal occupation, his principal joy, and his principal source of income. Poor, he contents himself with the modest repasts served in the little restaurants that abound in the Latin quarter : but he is rarely so poor as to be unable to help a friend in distress. His sight being feeble, he does not care to go out alone at night, and he has consequently been compelled to deprive himself of the pleasure of frequenting the theatres or opera, though he has not yet missed the yearly

She would tell him of the plans she had for her son, and that she hoped he would be a sober man. Every word she said was like a knife cutting me; and many a time I wished that I had died before I had ever tasted liquor. But, thank God, my mother got well. It was a long time before she was able to leave her room. I was her constant companion. Somehow it seemed to me, that her life depended upon my care.

"When the war broke out, I made up my mind that I ought to enlist. I told my mother about it, and asked her advice.

"Charles," she said, "I'm afraid to let you go."

"Afraid of what, mother," I asked, "are you afraid that I will be shot."

"Worse than that."

"Mother, what can you possibly mean?" I enquired.

"She blushed as she looked me in the face. But her reply was one never to be forgotten.

"Charles, I am afraid that you will be overpowered by strong drink."

"Mother," said I, "I solemnly vow by the sacred memory of my dead father that I will never drink another drop of intoxicating liquor without your consent.

"Then you may go to the war, Charley." That was her reply, boys. And I tell you what, when I drink an intoxicant, it will be when my mother's own hand brings it me and asks me to drink it."

"Amen!" said several of the soldiers who were listening to the Sergeant's story.

"I say, boys," said Ned. "Here goes the whiskey." Turning the canteen upside down, he emptied its contents on the ground. As the liquor went gurgling out he said, "I've got a mother too, and I'm done with liquor."

"And I, too!"

"And I!"

Every one took the pledge, and it was afterwards said that the men who were gathered around the camp-fire that night were the strongest temperance men in the whole brigade.—The Reformer.

He has also regularly paid his tribute of admiration to the exhibitions organized in Paris by Russian artists; but as on one occasion Tourgenieff got into difficulties with the Russian Government for giving him tickets, he has ceased to visit these collections of paintings. Finally, when in 1882 he helped to create the Russian Red Cross Society, the Government of the Czar procured his banishment from France. Lavroff is still under this decree of exile, and might now be imprisoned for having returned to Paris, but he was privately given to understand that his presence would be tolerated if he did not resume his course of lectures to the Russians residing in France. Now Lavroff's principal occupation is the editing of the European edition of the Will o the People, recently issued in magazine form at Geneva.—From the Pall Mall Gazette.

Killed While Playing Football.

Mr. Geotge Herman, 19, younger brother of the last Senior Wrangler, was engaged in a game of football, at Bath, recently, against the Bristol team, and, in a "maul" with the opposing team, received a severe blow on the head. He was removed from the field, but could not be taken home, and died of apoplexy caused by his injuries, after lingering in an unconscious state for several hours. No blame is attached to any one.

At the inquest it was stated that the game, which was played under Rugby rules, was an exceedingly rough one, no less than four men receiving injuries. Deceased was playing three-quarter back, and had numerous falls. He walked away shortly before the match terminated, and suddenly became unconscious. The medical evidence shewed that a large artery had given way within the skull, producing apoplexy. The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the evidence, and strongly condemned the Rugby rules.

I was never less alone than when by myself.

REFORM MEETING.

We would again remind our readers of the Reform meeting to be held in the new Opera House to-morrow afternoon, to be addressed by Mr. John Charlton, M.P. The chair will be taken at 2 p. m. A meeting of the Reform Association will be held at 1 o'clock, at which a large attendance is requested.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

—The proverbial lull after the storm has taken place at Ottawa. Since the close of the debate on the C. P. R. resolutions little more than routine work has been done.

—The cause of temperance is rapidly advancing. The by-law prohibiting the sale of liquor in groceries was carried in Toronto on Monday by the large majority of 360.

—Justice has at last been done Hon.

—Quebec is after all not over-exacting in asking an additional $1 per head population. The syndicate got $8 per head of the entire population of the Dominion, over and above the $25 per head already given them. Certainly, let Quebec have her millions. What is a hundred millions anyway?

—The new Ontario Government license bill provides for the open sitting of the license boards, for the enhanced severity of penalties and for a measure of local option, the electors of any polling subdivision being allowed by a petition signed by the majority to defeat any application for a license within their subdivision.

—The Hamilton Times truthfully remarks that the Reform party never got better service from a Toronto newspaper than the Globe has given during the past year, but the Toronto World joins issue. It believes the Mail is doing more for the Reformers than the Globe. Probably, but such is not intended.

—When Mr. Blake visited Belleville during the election of 1882 great placards were posted on the Birrell axe factory laudatory of the N.P. There has been a back-action there since. The workmen are now on strike because of a reduction of 17½ and 12½ per cent. in their wages. Probably the men do not now hanker after the N.P. as much as they did in 1882.

—Are the people of Addington satisfied with John W. Bell voting $150,000 out of their pockets as a bonus to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that without even consulting them in the matter? What would the people of Camden or Sheffield say of the reeves and councillors of those municipalities if they took it upon themselves to vote out of the municipal funds $150,000 for a railway in Prince Edward County? We are inclined to the opinion that they would protest most vigorously against such a high-handed act. Yet the reeves and councillors would be doing nothing more outrageous than John W. Bell has done in his vote on the C.P.R. resolutions.

—During the discussion on the C.P.R. resolutions a few days ago Peter Mitchell, M. P., insinuated that Mr. Blake's opposition was because of legal fees he obtained from the Grand Trunk. Mr. Blake in reply said it always pained him to have to refer to his personal affairs, but anybody who knew anything of his practice was probably aware of the fact that when he was engaged in it he made from $20,000 to $25,000 a year, whereas at present his income was only about $2,500 a year. This answer to a most uncalled for attack elicited loud applause, and Mr. Mitchell succumbed. It is well known that Mr. Mitchell's course in the House is not influenced by any great patriotism. He

THE CUSTOMS APPOINT

The following letter was handed to the other local papers last week. The editor of the "respectfully decline" request of the writer we give it in our columns:—

(To the Editor of THE EXPRESS)

SIR,—Notwithstanding the flattery and the opinions of a few puff-brothers who cannot tell black from white, it remains that a more general selection could not possibly be made. No one doubts Mr. Elliott's ability to fill the position, yet to a citizen and a Conservative, he is whatever.

He has only resided in town a few years. He was for a time the paid editor of a Conservative paper, and his duties as editor of the Conservative Association and his work in connection therewith were not such as to make him popular. He could not solicit a vote, had no influence, and was decidedly unpopular as a result. Yet a few almost insist that he is of the party in the hollow of his hand as a reward for "long and faithful" (?) service. He is placed in one of the best positions in the county at a salary of about two dollars a year.

In making this appointment the claims of men who have been hard working Conservatives for time and have stood by their party thick and thin, and who have taken an active part in the growth and progress of our town and county, are entirely in favour of a mere adventurer.

As Mr. Elliott is now fully installed in his position, but one thing is to be done. The Conservative cause can be greatly helped by avoiding these tactics in future.

Yours,

ANOTHER CONSERVATIVE

WHAT IS A MILLION.

By far the greater number of our advocates are trusting the Canadian Railway Company with $30,000,000 people's money have no concept of the greatness of the sum they are talking about. Men who would think it a great thing to lose $30 "clean cash" by the loss of an unfortunate shopkeeper or talk like Rothschilds about lending millions to a concern that is not its honest debts, and whose credit it cannot get accommodation in any ordinary way. Let us enquire a little what $30,000,000 means.

The whole wheat crop of Ontario and in that year the wheat crop was commonly good one—was, we see, estimated at 27,413,091 bushels. The wheat therefore raised in Ontario home consumption as well as for 1881, at $1 a bushel, would not be $30,000,000. If the farmers of Ontario were asked to lend one year's crop to the syndicate without any prospect of return they would look upon the request as fit to be put

—The proverbial lull after the storm has taken place at Ottawa. Since the close of the debate on the C. P. R. resolutions little more than routine work has been done.

—The cause of temperance is rapidly advancing. The by-law prohibiting the sale of liquor in groceries was carried in Toronto on Monday by the large majority of 360.

—Justice has at last been done Hon. David Mills. On Monday last the Supreme Court gave decision in the Bothwell election case giving him the seat usurped by the notorious Hawkins by aid of Jim Stephens, the returning officer. Mr. Mills took his seat yesterday and Hawkins stepped down and out. Nobody regretted his departure. Even the members of his own party latterly treated him with contempt and he sinks into a political retirement in which, it is to be hoped, no party will ever attempt to disturb him.

—The Pacific Railway "loan" of thirty million dollars has become law. There is not the slightest probability that this money, when once it leaves the Dominion treasury, will ever be returned. Let us see what this grant amounts to:—

It means a tax of $150,000 to every constituency in the Dominion.

To Lennox and Addington it means a tax of $300,000.

To every man, woman and child in this county it is a tax of $8.

To every ratepayer it is a tax of between $40 and $50.

Of course the tax is not direct, but it amounts to the same thing in the end. The money comes out of the people's pockets indirectly. Mr. John W. Bell, M.P., when he thus recklessly voted away the people's millions, may have thought that because the tax collector will not demand payment from house to house in his constituency, that little heed will be paid to his action, but he only insults the intelligence of his constituents by such reasoning. The people of Addington will hold him accountable for this vote and condemn him accordingly.

The people of Lennox are to be congratulated. Although they will also have to pay their full share of the "steal," they have the satisfaction of knowing that they sent a representative to the House who had the manliness and honesty to protest by his vote against this outrageous transaction.

This answer to a most uncalled for attack elicited loud applause, and Mr. Mitchell succumbed. It is well known that Mr. Mitchell's course in the House is not influenced by any great patriotism. He always has an axe to grind and in the Pacific Railway deal he has personal interest. On the other hand no man in the House has attended to public duties at as great sacrifice as Mr. Blake. He is giving his whole time to the affairs of the country, and by so doing has reduced his annual income from $25,000 to $2,500.

—The estimates of expenditures for the current year were brought down in the Legislative Assembly last week. They show a careful revision of expenditure in many departments. The vote asked $2,224,726.02 for current expenditures, $381,521.17 on capital account, and $40,826.65 for other purposes, making a total of $2,647,073.84. The division of expenditure under the different services is as follows:—Civil government, $178,817.34; legislation, $110,350; administration of justice, $299,000; education, $518,496; maintenance of public institutions, $549,754; immigration, $31,950; agriculture, arts, literary and scientific institutions, $150,290; hospitals and charities, $92,869.18; maintenance and repairs of Governmental and Departmental Buildings, $38,090; public buildings, $15,300 on repairs and $183,959.64 on capital account; public works, $11,550 on repairs and $38,415 on capital account; colonization roads, $159,145.55; charges on Crown lands, $79,400; refund account, $40,826.65; miscellaneous expenditure, $53,778.50; unforeseen and unprovided, $50,000.

—A peculiar feature of the McCarthy Act—now called the Great Confusion Act—is that it makes the Wardens of counties and Mayors of cities Commissioners in direct contravention of the Municipal Act, which clearly states that these officers shall not act as Commissioners. Upon accepting the Commissionership these officers become disqualified for the municipal offices mentioned. For this reason Mr. Flynn, Warden of Frontenac, has refused to act on the board for his coun-

WHAT IS A MILLIO

By far the greater number of advocates entrusting the Canadian Railway Company with $30,000 people's money have no conception of the greatness of the sum they are tall. Men who would think it a great loss to lose $30 "clean cash" by the loss of an unfortunate shopkeeper or talk like Rothchilds about lending millions to a concern that is not its honest debts, and whose credit that it cannot get accommodation ordinary way. Let us enquire a what $30,000,000 means.

The whole wheat crop of Ontario and in that year the wheat crop commonly good one—was, we see, estimated at 27,413,091 bushels, the wheat therefore raised in Ontario for home consumption as well as for export, at $1 a bushel, would not be worth $30,000,000. If the farmers of Ontario were asked to lend one year's crop to the syndicate without any profit, they would look upon the request as fit to be put in a hole.

Again, the export of agricultural products from the whole Dominion last year was valued at $32,818,519. This is not more than the proposed cash loan which the Government propose to make to the Canadian Railway Company.

The census of 1881 tells us that in Ontario there are 473,806 horses. Valued at $60 apiece all around, and we have $28,428,360, not quite as much as the people of Ontario are asked to make the syndicate out of.

The milch cows owned in Ontario are valued at $30 a head, worth $23,467,290, not quite a million more than the syndicate ask the Government to lend them in cash.

It is by calculations such as these that intelligent electors can form some adequate idea of the magnitude of the people's money which the Government of the Dominion intend to throw away upon the reckless, extravagant Canadian Railway Company.

LIQUOR LICENSES

The Globe of yesterday gives the new schedule of licenses under the Ontario and Dominion licenses:—

	On Ontario Licenses.
Each tavern, saloon, and shop license.
In cities.....	$160
In towns.....	110
Each tavern and shop license.
In villages.....	80
In townships.....	72
Each vessel license.....	125
Each wholesale license....	225

In its comments thereon the Globe says: "The spectacle of the Dominion Board soliciting applicants for licenses, in order to secure the profits allowed them under that Act, is indeed a sight to behold. Whether they will be successful in many of their solicitations remains to be seen."

stituency in the Dominion.

To Lennox and Addington it means a tax of $300,000.

To every man, woman and child in this county it is a tax of $8.

To every ratepayer it is a tax of between $40 and $50.

Of course the tax is not direct, but it amounts to the same thing in the end. The money comes out of the people's pockets indirectly. Mr. John W. Bell, M.P., when he thus recklessly voted away the people's millions, may have thought that because the tax collector will not demand payment from house to house in his constituency, that little heed will be paid to his action, but he only insults the intelligence of his constituents by such reasoning. The people of Addington will hold him accountable for this vote and condemn him accordingly.

The people of Lennox are to be congratulated. Although they will also have to pay their full share of the "steal," they have the satisfaction of knowing that they sent a representative to the House who had the manliness and honesty to protest by his vote against this outrageous transaction.

Those over sanguine people who profess to believe that the Syndicate will return the $30,000,000 voted by Parliament at the time appointed, should ascertain the reason why the loan of $15,000,000 to the Grand Trunk made some years ago has not been returned. Not one cent of this money has been returned to the Government, and what is more the interest has not been paid. Nor will it ever be paid, for the reason that the security has become absolutely worthless through other mortgages having been given preference. If the Grand Trunk successfully played this game what is to prevent the Canadian Pacific doing likewise? A Government loan to a railway really means a gift. The people will find this out in due course.

Hon. A. S. Hardy has given notice in the Legislature of a bill to regulate the fees to be paid for any license taken out under the Dominion Act. The fees are to be fixed as follows:—

On tavern, saloon, or shop licenses in cities.....	$300
Do in towns.....	250
On tavern or shop licenses in villages.....	150
Do in townships.....	120
On each wholesale license.....	350
On each vessel.....	250
Each transfer.....	20

The McCarthy Act expressly declares that on any license issued under it the Provincial Legislature may impose a tax or fee for provincial or municipal purposes; and also provides that any person entitled to a license under it must first show that he has paid any such fee that the Provincial Legislature may have seen fit to impose. The Toronto World says that "while the province fixes these duties it does so without prejudice in its contention that the right to legislate in respect of these licenses is conferred upon the Provincial Legislatures exclusively. But for fear that the Dominion law may be held to be valid this precautionary measure is taken. It is also the intention of the Government to increase the fees for licenses taken out under the provincial law, though it is not likely that they will be much more than half of the above figures."

istration of justice, $299,000; education, $518,496; maintenance of public institutions, $549,754; immigration, $31,950; agriculture, arts, literary and scientific institutions, $150,290; hospitals and charities, $92,869.18; maintenance and repairs of Governmental and Departmental Buildings, $38,090; public buildings, $15,300 on repairs and $183,959.64 on capital account; public works, $11,550 on repairs and $38,415 on capital account; colonization roads, $159,145.55; charges on Crown lands, $7,400; refund account, $40,826.65; miscellaneous expenditure, $53,778.50; unforeseen and unprovided, $50,000.

—A peculiar feature of the McCarthy Act—now called the Great Confusion Act—is that it makes the Wardens of counties and Mayors of cities Commissioners in direct contravention of the Municipal Act, which clearly states that these officers shall not act as Commissioners. Upon accepting the Commission these officers become disqualified for the municipal offices mentioned. For this reason Mr. Flynn, Warden of Frontenac, has refused to act on the board for his county. "Another feature of the McCarthy Act," says the Whig, "is that it makes the County Judges in Ontario, License Commissioners. Under both Acts the appeal from convictions lie to the County Judges or to the General Sessions presided over by them. In appeals arising under either Act, or from any conflict of authority between the Acts, these gentlemen will be placed in an unenviable position, one we are sure they do not covet, and many of them, we have it on reliable authority, have protested against being placed in such an awkward predicament."

—During the trouble the Government was experiencing last week from the recalcitrant Bleus, Hon. John Costigan, Minister of Internal Revenue, handed in his resignation. Next day the Mail poured out its vials of abuse on the Hon. John's head and accused him of having succumbed in a moment of weakness to the enemy, and charged Mr. Blake with intriguing with the Bleus to defeat the Government. The latter charge was promptly refuted in the House by Mr. Ouimet, speaking for the Bleus, and Sir John defended Mr. Costigan and announced that that gentleman had withdrawn his resignation and was again a member of the Government. It was thought after this the Mail would eat humble pie, but this it did not do. It repeated the charges in stronger language than before. The result is that the Bleus are very indignant and Mr. Costigan is much displeased. The Bleus were only got into line on the resolutions by a straight pledge from the Government that the Quebec demands would be granted. The Government, notwithstanding its large majority, is not strong. It is only kept together by satisfying the various factions with large grants from the public treasury. It may hold together until the treasury is empty, but no longer.

THE CUSTOMS APPOINTMENT.

The following letter was handed to one of the other local papers last week, but publication was "respectfully declined." At the request of the writer we give it a place in our columns:—

[To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.]

SIR,—Notwithstanding the flattering local puffs and the opinions of a few Conservatives who cannot tell black from white, the fact remains that a more generally unpopular selection could not possibly have been made. No one doubts Mr. Elliott's business ability to fill the position, yet to which, as a citizen and a Conservative, he has no claim whatever.

He has only resided in town a few years, was for a time the paid editor of a Conservative paper, and his duties as secretary of the Conservative Association and all other work in connection therewith were paid for. He could not solicit a vote, had no influence, and was decidedly unpopular as a canvasser, yet a few almost insist that he held the fate of the party in the hollow of his hand, and as a reward for "long and faithful services" (?) is placed in one of the best berths in the county at a salary of about twelve hundred dollars a year.

In making this appointment the opinions and claims of men who have been staunch and hard working Conservatives for a lifetime and have stood by their party through thick and thin, and who have taken a most active part in the growth and prosperity of our town and county, are entirely ignored in favour of a mere adventurer.

As Mr. Elliott is now fully installed, there let him rest, but, one thing is certain, the Conservative cause can be greatly benefitted by avoiding these tactics in future.

Yours,

ANOTHER CONSERVATIVE.

Napanee, Feb. 26th, 1884.

WHAT IS A MILLION?

By far the greater number of those who advocate antitrust the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with $30,000,000 of the people's money have no conception of the greatness of the sum they are talking about. Men who would think it a great misfortune to lose $30 "clean cash" by the bankruptcy of an unfortunate shopkeeper or mechanic, talk like Rothchilds about lending thirty millions to a concern that is not able to pay its honest debts, and whose credit is so bad that it cannot get accommodation in the ordinary way. Let us enquire a little into what $30,000,000 means.

The whole wheat crop of Ontario in 1881—and in that year the wheat crop was an uncommonly good one—was, we see by the census, estimated at 27,413,091 bushels. All the wheat therefore raised in Ontario for home consumption as well as for export in 1881, at $1 a bushel, would not amount to $30,000,000. If the farmers of the Dominion were asked to lend one year's wheat crop to the syndicate without any prospect of return they would look upon the man who

WHAT IS A MILLION?

By far the greater number of those who advocate entrusting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with $30,000,000 of the people's money have no conception of the greatness of the sum they are talking about. Men who would think it a great misfortune to lose $30 "clean cash" by the bankruptcy of an unfortunate shopkeeper or mechanic, talk like Rothschilds about lending thirty millions to a concern that is not able to pay its honest debts, and whose credit is so bad that it cannot get accommodation in the ordinary way. Let us enquire a little into what $30,000,000 means.

The whole wheat crop of Ontario in 1881—and in that year the wheat crop was an uncommonly good one—was, we see by the census, estimated at 27,413,091 bushels. All the wheat therefore raised in Ontario for home consumption as well as for export in 1881, at $1 a bushel, would not amount to $30,000,000. If the farmers of the Dominion were asked to lend one year's wheat crop to the syndicate without any prospect of return they would look upon the man who made the request as fit to be put in a mad house.

Again, the export of agricultural produce from the whole Dominion last year amounted to $32,818,519. This is not much more than the proposed cash loan which the Government propose to make to Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

The census of 1881 tells us that there are in Ontario 473,806 horses. Value these at $60 apiece all around, and we have $28,434,360, not quite as much as the people of Canada are asked to make the syndicate represent of.

The milch cows owned in Ontario number 782,543. These at $30 a head would be worth $23,467,290, not quite a million more than the syndicate ask the Government to lend them in cash.

It is by calculations such as these that the intelligent electors can form something like an adequate idea of the magnitude of the sums of the people's money which the Government of the Dominion intend to throw away upon the reckless, extravagant Pacific Railway Company.

“The spectacle of the Dominion Licensing Boards soliciting applicants for Dominion licenses, in order to secure the paltry fees allowed them under that Act, is edifying indeed. Whether they will be successful in many of their solicitations remain to be seen. The person who depends upon the license issued by the Dominion Government renders himself liable to prosecution by the authorities of Ontario, who will leave no legal means untried to defer their exclusive jurisdiction as expounded by the Privy Council in regard to the licensing power. Even were the Dominion Act held to be legal, the power of levying duties on licenses most clearly remains with the Local Legislature, a fact which the Dominion Act specifically recognizes by providing that licensees shall before securing their license pay the fees fixed by the Provincial Legislature. And the fees which the Government proposes to place upon the licenses granted under the two Acts are such as to make an applicant hesitate before basing his right to sell liquor on the unsubstantial fabric of Dominion legislation in this matter.”

A NEW MORAL FROM AN OLD STORY.

[From the Montreal Witness.]

It takes eighteen columns of Sir Charles Tupper's oratory to explain the advantages of the new loan. A short story with a moral will make the transaction clear to those who do not care to wade through this mass of printer's ink.

Some years ago a man entered a country store.

The following dialogue ensued:—

Customer—"What is the price of your best crackers?"

Merchant—"Ten cents a pound."

Customer—"I guess I'll take a pound."

The merchant weighs out the crackers and hands them to the customer.

Customer—"Have you any very good whiskey?"

Merchant—"Yes, it is ten cents a glass."

Customer—"Well, I guess I'll change my mind and give you back the crackers and take a glass of whiskey."

Customer, drinking the whiskey, smacks his lips, says it is good and turns to leave the store.

Merchant—"Hello, you have forgotten to pay for the whiskey."

Customer—"Have I not given you the crackers?"

Merchant—"But you have not paid for the crackers."

Customer—"Did I not give you the crackers back?" and walks out of the store leaving the merchant reflecting on the transaction and wondering where his ten cents came in. Our representatives at Ottawa a few years hence will find out where the joke comes in.

WEEK'S NEWS CONDENSED.

THURSDAY, FEB. 21.

—A considerable force of Egyptian rebels that were approaching Suakim were defeated to-day. Tokar has surrendered to the rebels.

—Elsie Williams has confessed herself the murderer of the colored man Kent in the Digby tragedy. She says that when Kent and Jordan fell to the floor in the struggle the former was on top, and fearing that he might kill Jordan she struck him several times with an axe.

—Five thousand miners are on strike at Auzon, France.

—The store of Roblin & Yott at Rednerville was entered by burglars last night and $15 in cash and a quantity of boots, shoes and dry goods stolen. There is no clue to the thieves.

—Recently Piegan Indians stole a number of ponies from the Crows and white men on the Yellowstone. The Piegans were pursued and four killed and one wounded, and two whites killed and two wounded.

—Reports from all over Georgia show that the storm which passed over that State last Tuesday was unprecedented. Four hundred people are now reported killed and an immense number injured. The destruction of property was also large in proportion.

FRIDAY, FEB. 22.

—Another outrageous assault was committed in Long Island last night, the victim being Mrs. Stephen Hutchinson, who was returning to her home from a concert about 10 o'clock. When passing a clump of trees a man sprang up in the road and demanded her money. She told him she had none with her. He then knocked her down and beat her until she was insensible and then outraged her. She was found about midnight by her husband who had become alarmed at her long absence and started out to meet her. The lady is about 35 years old. She is delirious and lies in a critical condition.

—Osman Digna is at Teb with a large force eager to fight.

—Weston, the pedestrian, has completed 4,000 miles of the 5,000 miles he has undertaken to walk.

—A stranger attempted to commit suicide this morning at Niagara Falls by cutting his throat, but failing in this he shot himself through the brain and accomplished his purpose. If it thought his mind was unbalanced.

—A dreadful accident is reported from the village of Bridgewater, N. S. Mr. Burns' house and all the contents were burned. Mrs. Burns and her daughter made their escape from the burning building by leaping from the upper window, but Mr. Burns and an adopted daughter about 14 years of age were unable to escape, and were burned to death.

—Enoch Hennington, of Toronto, had a leg taken off by a train passing over it this morning.

SATURDAY, FEB. 23.

—Rev. H. Austin of Gananoque has declined the invitation to become the curate of St. George's Cathedral, Kingston.

—The war between France and China is becoming more violent. Gen. Millot, commander of the French, is preparing to operate against Bac Ninh with 3,000 men. The Chinese have burned a village.

—A corporation laborer of Hamilton named McCallum was crushed to death to-day by the falling of an embankment.

—There were 206 failures in the United States last week.

—Placards have been found posted in various places in Vienna appealing to the people, asking them how long they will let the monarchy live.

—At Troy, N.Y., to-day burglars effected entrance to E. Mark & Son's jewelry store and abstracted goods, including valuable diamonds, gold watches, cast jewelry, etc., estimated to the value of between $40,000 and $50,000.

—A passenger train on the Hannibal and St. Jo road went through a bridge over the Chariton river last night, wrecking the entire train. One person was killed and 27 were more or less injured.

—The Indian uprising in the North-West promises to be a serious affair. A band under Yellow Calf has captured the Government stores at Long Lake and will not give them up. A detachment of Mounted Police attacked Yellow Calf's band but were forced to retreat. At the File Hills reserve the Indians made the store-keepers prisoners and took possession of everything.

They Called Him "Pa."

Two boys who work in the papers mills at Napanee Mills were before Squire James on Monday charged with using insulting language to a man. The offence consisted of the boys calling him "pa" whenever they met him. Decision will be given next Monday. Is it insulting to be called "pa?" If so there are a good many fond parents insulted every hour of the day.

—The letters R. S. V. P., which are seen at the foot of an invitation in polite society, mean "Repondez s'il vous plait," which is French for "Reply, if you please." The letters appeared after the name of the Mayor of Montreal in the invitation to the Mayor of Boston to attend the Carnival. The secretary of Boston's Mayor did reply, but thinking that the letters meant some title of the party he was writing to, addressed him, "Mr. C. G. B——, R. S. V. P." This reminds us of the story of a plain old country couple who were invited by fashionable relatives in the city to attend a party. The letters R. S. V. P. were translated by them to mean "Remember six, very punctual," and they attended the party several hours ahead of the other guests.

Pimples and Blotches.

Call at T. A. Huffman's and A. W. Grange's drug stores and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is composed of Vaseline, Carbolic Acid and Cerate, and has never failed to remove Pimples, Blotches, Ulcerated Sores, Rough Skin. It cures when others fail. Try it.

—The head waiter in the Burnett House, Kingston, secured a fortune of $5,000 by the death of a great-aunt in England. He has retired from hotel life.

Warning.

If troubled with constipated bowels, never neglect it, or the system becomes clogged, the secretions dried up and the system poisoned with foul gases. Burdock Blood Bitters cure constipation by unlocking the secretions and regulating the glandular system.

THE ART OF PROLONGING LIFE CONSISTS IN understanding the essential conditions on which the act of life depends. But to reconstruct the human system after it has become physically demoralized by disease, is really to create a new being. Yet, that this can be done is capable of actual demonstration. Dr. Wheeler's Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya, by aiding the digestive process, and furnishing the elements of bone, muscle, and nerve, perfects the assimilation of food, and complete nourishment of the tissues; morbid products and humors are removed from the blood, and a healthy process of repair set up, which gradually restores and vitalizes all the organs, according to nature's process of building up the feeble constitution.

—A man named Heffrod, who murdered a fellow workman at Thorold a few years ago and escaped to the United States, was arrested at Port Colborne to-day. The constable was taking his prisoner to Welland, and when at the depot the latter cleverly tripped up his captor and effected his escape. He is probably by this time safe in the States.

—Mrs. Haight, of Morrisville, N.Y., convicted of the murder of her husband, has been sentenced to be hanged.

—The Grand Trunk Company has decided to run passenger trains into Kingston city next summer.

—Sanders, who seriously stabbed the bartender Forrester at Kingston last Friday, has been arrested.

TUESDAY, FEB. 26.

—Shortly after one o'clock this morning an explosion took place in the cloak room of the Victoria railway station at London, Eng. The explosive agent was undoubtedly dynamite. A large portion of the roof was blown off, and nearly all the glass-work in the station destroyed. Seven men were severely injured. Extensive damage was done to surrounding property.

—Kingston will hold races on the ice on Monday and Tuesday next.

—When the steamship Circassian arrived at Halifax from Liverpool this morning a passenger named Haight, of Port Hope, Ont., missed his valise, which contained jewelry, diamond rings, etc., valued at $3,000. He had the valise hidden away, and how the thief obtained the knowledge of its whereabouts is a mystery.

—The City Council of St. John, N. B., has appointed a committee to consider alleged infringements of the City Charter by the McCarthy License Act.

Officeholders.

The office held by the Kidneys is one of importance. They act as nature's sluice-way to carry off the extra liquids from the system and with them the impurities both those that are taken into the stomach and those that are formed in the blood. Any clogging or inaction of these organs is therefore important. Kidney Wort in Nature's efficient assistant in keeping the kidneys in good working order, strengthening them and inducing healthy action. If you would get well and keep well, take Kidney Wort.

Rest and Comfort to the Suffering.

"Brown's Household Panacea" has no equal for relieving pain, both internal and external. It cures Pain in the Side, Back or Bowels, Sore Throat, Rheumatism, Toothache, Lumbago, and any kind of a Pain or Ache. "It will most assuredly quicken the Blood and Heal, as its acting power is wonderful." "Brown's Household Panacea" being acknowledged as the great Pain Reliever, and of double the strength of any other Elixir or Liniment in the world, should be in every family handy for use when wanted, "as it really is the best remedy in the world for Cramps in the Stomach, and Pains and Aches of all kinds," and is for sale by all Druggists at 25 cents a bottle. 14-12-ly.

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses. Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in his admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

A Reverie.

BY DR. MULVANY.

Is it dusk or is it day
In your bower, love, far away?
Day or dusk within your bower,
It is love's most longed-for hour.
Love that, free or fetter'd, still Bids his time nor wants his will.

In that bower what should love see,
Were his fiery wings but free?
What intensest joy or pain,
Could his heart know once again,
Might one wild hour once fulfill Love's unfettered utmost will?

Love, what sense of sight or sound
Should that place of tryst surround?
Only the soft lamplight gloom
Of the world shut in our room,
And your voice blest with the free
Far susurrus of the sea!

In that hour, love, would you share
Love's reward, were love but there?
And nor scorn nor shrink to give
All for which he cares to live,
And be his who comes to thee
Far-abiding by the sea!

CUPIDITY AND CRIME.

CHAPTER XV.

From that day Nettie Clare's suggestion and Nettie herself occupied a prominent place in Vance Singleton's thoughts. She had at least offered him one way of escape out of his difficulties, and, though he did not much relish the thought of an actor's life, anything was better than that he was at present leading; and then, little by little, he began to see that any occupation which brought him and Nettie together would sooner or later grow easy and congenial to his taste.

They were not old friends. Six months back he hardly knew Miss Clare by name, and it was the purest accident that brought those two together—the accident, first, that made him useful to the little lame sister in whom the girl's heart was wrapped up, and afterwards the idleness that allowed him to drift into any intimacy that led him away from his dismal home.

The rescue to which Mrs. Clare and her daughter attached an heroic importance, and of which Nettie spoke with such exaggerated gratitude still, seemed to the young man but a simple affair, costing him only one jerk of the muscle and a muddy coat-sleeve—neither more nor less than that.

He happened to be standing outside Victoria Station one very wet and windy night, waiting for a man who had promised to meet him there, and idly watching the proceedings of the people who were fighting over their luggage and for the cabs around. A train from the country was just in, and the usual scene of bustle and confusion was proceeding.

A little to his left, upon the crowded platform, stood a small slight girl whose movements he found himself following became lighter when he poured them into Nettie's sympathising ear.

The simple family history was soon told. Mrs. Clare, a faded pretty woman, with a clear soft voice, and the bright brown eyes that Nettie had inherited, had been an actress before her marriage with the young surgeon Robert Clare; but she had abandoned the stage, and settled down to her wifely and motherly duties without regret—though she had never severed her connection with her old friends—a fact that stood her in good stead in the time of her trouble; for, when, after sixteen years of quiet, struggling happiness, poor Robert Clare died quite suddenly in the prime of his manhood, leaving his widow and her two young children totally unprovided for, these warm-hearted unconventional friends rallied unanimously around them and did them yeoman's service.

Jenny was, and always would be, a helpless cripple; Mrs. Clare, though still comparatively young, was too broke in health and spirits to return to the scene of her modest triumphs; but Nettie, with her pretty saucy face, her clear birdlike voice, fresh, tuneful, and strong, her pretty graceful little figure—everything might be hoped for Nettie in her mother's old profession.

So, being carefully drilled, taught, and brought out under most favorable auspices, Nettie in due time made her appearance, took the public fancy in a small way, and became, after a brief apprenticeship, the bread-winner of the small family.

Not a little proud was Miss Nettie of her important position; and, though Mrs. Clare often wondered and doubted whether Robert would sleep quietly in his green grave out on the northern hill if he knew the burden that had been laid on his little girl's slender shoulders, and the fashion in which she bore it, she could not but share the girl's unselfish exultation in her own success.

"You shall be so comfortable, mother, you and Jenny, by-and-by!" the clear young voice would cry, with a little thrill of triumph. "I am quite a 'star' in the provinces already—and presently I mean to be one here."

Perhaps this utter and unselfish absorption in the family interests kept Nettie safely shielded from the baser influences of her strange new life. Certain it is that in an atmosphere in which nine out of ten girls would have deteriorated she kept her brave, frank simplicity of manner, her honesty of speech and thought, absolutely intact. A little harder and shrewder in driving a bargain, a little more independent in action, than if she had grown up a little home-keeping maiden in her father's care, the family bread-winner perforce became, but in no other way did she suffer from contact with the rough outer world. The little actress dropped her tinsel robes to tions he worked like a Trojan to the uninitiated it may be life for which he was preparing more child's-play than his superfluous and unnecessary greater mistake made. In exertion, inexhaustible patience, attention that never waned task—all these his instructive and all these he tried to satisfactory result of pleasure last.

"A short country engagement for town and fame!" Nettie's real triumph in her town, Clare added, as her quota of merit—

"And then you can revict and astonish the fashionable home."

Vance shuddered a little at the words, which were by no means so pleasant as poor Mrs. Clare thought. The young fellow's mind's eye the young fellow's grotesquely horrible picture of the situation produced by his wife's Bruce's gray pallor, Christine's mother's ready tears and disgrace he had brought upon him. He could not even count on sympathy, for, since Arthur Beaumont had grown not hard, strange and apathetic, so seemed to rouse or interest him.

When he reached home he was fully expected to be questioned long absence, badgered, surrounded generally uncomfortable for once, no one seemed to care that he had been away. On interest pervaded the whole, swallowed up all other considerations. Lord de Gretton had proposed and had been accepted. He hardly believe his ears when fore he had time to remove or exchange a greeting with his mother told him, in tones trembled with excess of joy, what she called "the great news."

He stared at her for a second, flushed face, her sparkling feverish excitement of her will forbade the idea that she was jesting; and yet, if it were what was it?

"How stupid you are, Vance, sharply. "It is well I prepare hope you will be readier with congratulations to the future Lord."

"Lord de Gretton!" Vance slowly—and for once he looked stupid; for he could not wandering wits or take in idea at all. "Lord de Gretton he is as old as the governor, as as—"

"For shame, Vance!" she said with an angry frown. "A

He happened to be standing outside Victoria Station one very wet and windy night, waiting for a man who had promised to meet him there, and idly watching the proceedings of the people who were fighting over their luggage and for the cabs around. A train from the country was just in, and the usual scene of bustle and confusion was proceeding.

A little to his left, upon the crowded platform, stood a small slight girl whose movements he found himself following with amused attention. She was quite young, and looked half boyish in her close-fitting ulster and round felt hat, with her close-cropped curly hair; but she was a thorough little woman of business, and superintended the moving of her numerous boxes and basket-trunks with cool-headed promptitude and decision.

Beside her, clinging closely to her arm, and looking nervously around, stood a pale large-eyed child, warmly dressed in black velvet and fur, with pale yellow hair falling loosely over her shoulders, perhaps to conceal the slight outward curve of the spine. Her face had the wistful peevish look born of incessant pain, and her voice, which was clear and sharp, had a certain fretful ring.

"Where is mother, Nettie?" she said, as the two followed the now completely laden trunk to the station door; and, watching them, Vance saw that one small foot dragged in a pitifully helpless fashion. "Mother said she would come."

"But it is such a wet night, dear, mother is much better at home getting some nice tea ready for us," the elder sister answered cheerfully. "Come, Jenny, get in; you need not wait for the boxes."

She held the cab door open; but the child drew away her hand pettishly, and, screwing up the pale peakish face as though she were about to cry, said, in a sharp accusing tone—

"Mother said she would come; we must wait for her, Nettie. Ah, there she is!"

Forgetting her lameness, she sprang out into the muddy roadway, only to reel and fall right in the track of a heavily laden omnibus, at that moment starting from the station door.

The driver, high perched, and blinded by the thick steaming mist that lay like a veil over all things, saw nothing of what had happened, and really thought the young man drunk or mad when he stopped his plunging horses with a jerk that nearly flung him from his seat.

could not but share the girl's unselfish exaltation in her own success.

"You shall be so comfortable, mother, you and Jenny, by-and-by!" the clear young voice would cry, with a little thrill of triumph. "I am quite a 'star' in the provinces already—and presently I mean to be one here."

Perhaps this utter and unselfish absorption in the family interests kept Nettie safely shielded from the baser influences of her strange new life. Certain it is that in an atmosphere in which nine out of ten girls would have deteriorated she kept her brave, frank simplicity of manner, her honesty of speech and thought, absolutely intact. A little harder and shrewder in driving a bargain, a little more independent in action, than if she had grown up a little home-keeping maiden in her father's care, the family bread-winner perforce became, but in no other way did she suffer from contact with the rough outer world. The little actress dropped her tinsel robes to play at home with heart-whole energy the part of loving daughter and devoted sister-nurse.

She was returning from a brief seaside engagement on the momentous evening of her first meeting with Vance, having taken Jenny with her, thinking that the fresh salt breeze might benefit the delicate town-bred child.

"But for you Mr. Singleton, that journey would have had a terrible ending," Mrs. Clare declared one day for the twentieth time, pressing her handkerchief to her eyes; "but for you we should have lost the very light of our existence."

Vance felt as stupid as a man always does feel when he is desperately overpraised for a thing that cost him little or no exertion, and wished he could think of some civil way of "cutting her short." The rather gloomy-looking "light of her existence" came to his assistance by announcing that Nettie had just turned into the street. It was pretty to see how the worn, unchildlike face brightened, and how furiously the fair head nodded its greeting.

Every incident of that by-gone time, of their first meeting, and the quiet fashion in which his chance acquaintance with the Clares had cemented itself into a steady friendship, passed before Vance Singleton as he meditated over Nettie's proposition.

After all, why should he not try the life she led—at least for a while? He was not troubled with shyness; he had a good memory and a strong voice. His young Mentor assured him that these were the only absolutely necessary qualifications for a stage career. There were prizes, she assured him, in this queer profession, and in every other he seemed to draw a hopeless blank. Well—he drew himself together with sudden resolution—coute que coute, he would try this.

Nettie was delighted when he told her his determination, and Mrs. Clare admitted, after some slight demur, that she or exchange a greeting word his mother told him, in tones that trembled with excess of joy at what she called "the great news."

He stared at her for a second flushed face, her sparkling feverish excitement of her whole forebode the idea that she was jesting; and yet, if it were not what was it?

"How stupid you are, Vance," sharply. "It is well I prepare hope you will be readier with congratulations to the future Lady-ton."

"Lord de Gretton!" Vance slowly—and for once he looked ingly stupid; for he could not wandering wits or take in the idea at all. "Lord de Gretton he is as old as the governor, and as—"

"For shame, Vance!" she in with an angry frown. "A man scorn to repeat the gossip of the mongers. Lord de Gretton is man in the best sense of the word as for the slight disparity of tween them, dear Nora is too girl not to see that that only the compliment he pays her. I right side, and makes him in her superior, as her lord and master."

"And Arthur Beaupre—has gotten him?" the young man when at last, for lack, not of breath, Mrs. Bruce came to a pause.

"Forgotten him? No. But not wait out her life besides. Don't be so ridiculously sentimental, Vance. I cannot argue with a absurd."

Vance was not sorry to drop the subject. If Nora's had not been and real heart-grief, then were worth nothing, and were themselves worth little more. And he was specially unwilling to let women just then. If Nora had her brave young lover and comforted self with a battered coronet; soon, why, Nettie Clare might be as frank and honest as she seemed.

The reflection irrelevant as it was, vexed and irritated Vance as he met Nora coldly, and proffered congratulation with an ill grace that annoyed his mother and delighted her, who was boiling over with envy, and credited him with a of her own agreeable feelings.

Nora however did not seem to be displeased. Just as he left her, coldly composed, apathetic, different. The only change was a great diamond ring that glit on her little finger, and the extreme attention with which she was treated.

When he made the bridegroom's acquaintance. Vance set him down as the two followed the now completely laden trunk to the station door; and, watching them, Vance saw that one small foot dragged in a pitifully helpless fashion. "Mother said she would come."

"But it is such a wet night, dear, mother is much better at home getting some nice tea ready for us," the elder sister answered cheerfully. "Come, Jenny, get in; you need not wait for the boxes."

She held the cab door open ; but the child drew away her hand pettishly, and, screwing up the pale peakish face as though she were about to cry, said, in a sharp accusing tone—

"Mother said she would come; we must wait for her, Nettie. Ah, there she is!"

He swore savagely at first ; but, when he saw Vance pick up the unconscious child, his ruddy face grew almost pale.

"'Lor' save us! I have not killed her?" he asked, in a husky whisper; and, though Mr. Singleton knew that the horses' hoofs had not even touched the yellow tresses, he could not with any degree of certainty say that the child still lived. She lay like a dead thing in his strong arms, so white and cold and still.

However, she did not die ; nor in two or three days' time was she any the worse for the accident, though it was and will always remain a marvel to Vance that the mother and sister did not expire of sheer fright. Jenny Clare was not an attractive child from an outsider's point of view, being peevish and exacting even beyond the privilege of a confirmed invalid ; but she was just the light of life to those two lonely women.

Their gratitude for the service rendered them was painfully earnest and sincere, and Vance grew to hate the subject of Jenny's rescue, and half made up his mind to see no more of the people who made so much of a bit of cheap heroism but it was easier to form the resolution than to keep it, as he soon found out, and most afternoons found him listening to Mrs. Clare's gentle chatter, Jenny's querulous complaints, or the shrewd laughing philosophy of Nettie herself.

He did not understand the fascination that shabby London lodging had for him nor how he came to listen with such exhaustless interest to Mrs. Clare's oftentimes long and rambling anecdotes of their strange and chequered existence, to bear so patiently with Jenny's whims, to feel that all his troubles and vexations of some civil way of "cutting her short." The rather gloomy-looking "light of her existence" came to his assistance by announcing that Nettie had just turned into the street. It was pretty to see how the worn, unchildlike face brightened, and how furiously the fair head nodded its greeting.

Every incident of that by-gone time, of their first meeting, and the quiet fashion in which his chance acquaintance with the Clares had cemented itself into a steady friendship, passed before Vance Singleton as he meditated over Nettie's proposition.

After all, why should he not try the life she led—at least for a while? He was not troubled with shyness; he had a good memory and a strong voice. His young Mentor assured him that these were the only absolutely necessary qualifications for a stage career. There were prizes, she assured him, in this queer profession, and in every other he seemed to draw a hopeless blank. Well—he drew himself together with sudden resolution—coute que coute, he would try this.

Nettie was delighted when he told her his determination, and Mrs. Clare admitted, after some slight demur, that she thought the choice a wise one. They both agreed that, until he had achieved at least some measure of success, it would be well to say nothing at home of the bold step he had taken.

"People are so prejudiced," Nettie said, with a sage shake of her crisp brown curls and a little scornful pout of her cherry-red lips that made her look very like a naughty defiant child and more bewitchingly pretty than ever.

"And very wise and good people too, dear," her mother interposed, in mild correction. "Your own father, I fear——" Her voice faltered, and she bent her head a little to hide the dimness of her eyes. Vance thought; but, before either of them could speak, she went on quickly, "I think Mr. Singleton is quite right, Nettie; prejudice apart, it will be a much easier and pleasanter thing to say, 'I have succeeded in my profession; look at the solid results!' than merely to mention that he intends to adopt a mode of life utterly unknown to them, and held by their world in very slight esteem."

"Exactly so," the young man agreed, with grateful eagerness—it was delightful to have his own vague floating ideas so charmingly put. "And, if I make an utter failure, it will be so much easier and pleasanter not to mention it at all."

"Ah, but you will not fail!" Nettie said, with consoling decision; and so the bond was signed and sealed, and the most important step in Vance Singleton's life was finally taken.

After this, he was very little at Nettle-ton until the end came. He had never really worked at anything before; but under Mrs. Clare and Nettie's instruc-

Vance was not sorry to drop the subject. If Nora's had not been a real heart-grief, then women were worth nothing, and women were worth little more. And he was specially unwilling to hurt women just then. If Nora had her brave young lover and carried herself with a battered coronet, soon, why, Nettie Clare might be frank and honest than she seemed.

The reflection irrelevant as it was, vexed and irritated met Nora coldly, and proffered gratulation with an ill grace that annoyed his mother and delicate, who was boiling over with envy, and credited him with her own agreeable feelings.

When he made the bride acquaintance, Vance set him down in ready fashion as a superior, and was desperately in love with her. He was prepared for her sake to extend toleration to all connected with her, at first to him, though he was aware of the bitterest pill of all, that he hardly wondered at that, for the sight of his lean gray face and sunken eyes, hated the thought that he might take poor Arthur's place; and he was himself offensive to him of late. His intense instinctive dislike to Lord de Gretton made him very unwilling to cross the threshold of the fine South Kensington house that, though nominally taken by Captain Bruce, he knew was provided by the bridegroom-elect. Moreover, it hurt him to see Arthur Beaupre's promised wife by this new lover's side—
for, despite his reckless ways, Vance Singleton was strangely loyal at heart.

And he had plenty to occupy him at that time. The modest engagement of which Nettie spoke had been secured, and,
despite the unaccountable nervousness
that came upon him at the last moment, his first appearance had been a decided success, and the easily-elated young fellow was filled with glowing hopes for the future, hopes that were not wholly concerned with his professional advancement.

He had played with fire, never dreaming of the result, and suddenly he found that he was scorched. He had congratulated himself on his firm friendship with Miss Clare, and found quite suddenly that he was desperately in love.

The shock dazzled him. Their relations had been anything but sentimental.
Nettie had been the hard task-mistress,
the sage adviser. He had seen her flirt openly with others. Never had she flirt-ed with him; and yet—

It was on the night of his successful debut that he knew his fate. His heart beat with disagreeable quickness as he glanced across the room and saw the bright little creature chatting and laughing with a tall good-looking man in evening dress. He was the critic of a powerful daily newspaper, Vance afterwards knew, and had come round behind the scenes to congratulate her on her great success.

Vance thought he might have paid his compliments with less enthusiasm and warmth, and felt the strongest possible inclination "to punch his straw-colored head." But unluckily he could hit upon no pretence for interfering, so he had to content himself with retiring into the re-motest corner of the green-room, and scowling at the unconscious Nettie across the parti-colored and ever-shifting crowd.

That is, he thought her unconscious then, for the brilliant hazel eyes never once wandered in his direction, and the girl's whole attention seemed given to her companion's silver speech. But afterwards, when the piece was over and the loungers were gone, when the two young people were walking home through the gas-lighted thoroughfares and quieter moonlit streets that led to her mother's lodgings—when they two were alone together, he found out his mistake.

They walked on in unusual silence for a little time—she because the coolness of the spring air refreshed and revived her tions he worked like a Trojan. Perhaps to the uninitiated it may seem that the life for which he was preparing was such more child's-play that his exertions were superfluous and unnecessary. Never was greater mistake made. Unflagging exertion, inexhaustible patience, and an attention that never wandered from his task—all these his instructresses exacted, and all these he tried to give, with the satisfactory result of pleasing them at last.

"A short country engagement, and then for town and fame!" Nettie said, with real triumph in her tone; while Mrs.
Clare added, as her quota of the reward
of merit—

"And then you can reveal your secret and astonish the family circle at home."

Vance shuddered a little at the closing words, which were by no means so pleasant as poor Mrs. Clare thought. In his mind's eye the young fellow saw a grotesquely horrible picture of the consternation produced by his words—Captain Bruce's gray pallor, Christine's icy disgust, his mother's ready tears and wail over the disgrace he had brought upon them all.
He could not even count on Nora's sympathy, for, since Arthur Beaupre's death, Nora had grown not hard, but cold and strange and apathetic, so that nothing seemed to rouse or interest her.

When he reached home that night, he fully expected to be questioned as to his long absence, badgered, suspected, and rendered generally uncomfortable: but,
for once, no one seemed even to know that he had been away. One absorbing interest pervaded the whole house and swallowed up all other considerations.
Lord de Gretton had proposed to Nora, and had been accepted. Vance could hardly believe his ears when, almost before he had time to remove his overcoat or exchange a greeting word with her,
his mother told him, in tones that literally
trembled with excess of joy and pride, what she called "the great and glorious news."

He stared at her for a second or so; her flushed face, her sparkling eyes, the feverish excitement of her whole manner, forebade the idea that she was simply jesting; and yet, if it were not a joke,
what was it?

"How stupid you are, Vance!" she said sharply. "It is well I prepared you. I hope you will be readier with your congratulations to the future Lady de Gretton."

"Lord de Gretton!" Vance repeated slowly—and for once he looked exceedingly stupid; for he could not collect his wandering wits or take in the strange idea at all. "Lord de Gretton! Why, he is as old as the governor, and as wicked
as—"

"For shame, Vance!" she interrupted, with an angry frown. "A man should scorn to repeat the gossip of the scandal-mongers. Lord de Gretton is a gentleman in the best sense of the word. And, as for the slight disparity of years between them, dear Nora is too sensible a girl not to see that that only enhances the compliment he pays her. It is on the right side, and makes him in every way her superior, as her lord and master should be."

"And Arthur Beaupre—has she forgotten him?" the young man ventured, when at last, for lack, not of words, but breath, Mrs. Bruce came to an abrupt pause.

"Forgotten him? No. But she cannot wail out her life besides his grave. Don't be so ridiculously sentimental, Vance. I cannot argue with a person so absurd."

Vance was not sorry to drop the subject. If Nora's had not been real love and real heart-grief, then woman's tears were worth nothing, and women themselves worth little more. And somehow he was specially unwilling to think ill of women just then. If Nora had forgotten her brave young lover and consoled herself with a battered coronet so cruelly soon, why, Nettie Clare might be less frank and honest than she seemed!

The reflection irrelevant and illogical as it was, vexed and irritated him. He met Nora coldly, and proffered his congratulation with an ill grace that seriously annoyed his mother and delighted Cristine, who was boiling over with spite and envy, and credited him with a full share of her own agreeable feelings.

Nora however did not seem to heed his displeasure. Just as he left her he found her, coldly composed, apathetic, and indifferent. The only change was in the great diamond ring that glittered on her little finger, and the extreme deference and attention with which she was now treated.

When he made the bridegroom's acquaintance, Vance set him down in rough and ready fashion as a supercilious snob, desperately in love with Nora, and prepared for her sake to extend a haughty toleration to all connected with her, even at first to him, though he was unmistakably the bitterest pill of all. And he hardly wondered at that, for he hated the sight of his lean gray face and cruel crafty eyes, hated the thought that he would take poor Arthur's place; and so he made himself offensive to him of malice premeditation. But afterwards, when the piece was over and the loungers were gone, when the two young people were walking home through the gas-lighted thoroughfares and quieter moonlit streets that led to her mother's lodgings—when they two were alone together, he found out his mistake.

They walked on in unusual silence for a little time—she because the coolness of the spring air refreshed and revived her after the heated atmosphere of the theatre, and she thought only of breathing it freely; he because an unusual shyness and a somewhat sulky dignity oppressed him. Vance was angry with her, yet so fully conscious that his anger was unfounded and absurd that he did not dare to speak it.

Suddenly Nettie broke the stupid silence with a merry little laugh.

"Do you know you did very well to-night, Vance?" They had long dropped all titles of ceremony in their easy friendly intercourse. "Mr. Burgoyne was inquiring quite anxiously about you."

"Mr. Burgoyne was very kind," Vance snarled.

"Oh, Vance, how ungracious you are," Nettie said quickly, "and"—with the little air of prudent foresight that sat with such charming quaintness on the small girl-face—"how imprudent also. Don't you know that Mr. Burgoyne is not only a critic, but an author? He writes comedies with modern gentleman heroes. Only think, Vance"—opening the big hazel eyes delightedly—"what a chance for you? I am quite sure, when he was talking to me to-night, and you were scowling like a demon at the unfortunate young man, that he was thinking how he could secure you for his new piece."

The innocent pleading tone, the unconscious revelation of her words, went straight to Vance Singleton's heart, thrilling it through and through with the absurdest ecstasy.

How to Reduce One's Weight.

A woman weighing 200 pounds called on a physician for advice. He gave her the following instructions:—

1. For breakfast eat a piece of beef or mutton as large as your hand, with a slice of bread twice as large. For dinner the same amount of meat, or, if preferred, fish or poultry, with the same amount of farinaceous or vegetable food in the form of bread or potato. For supper, nothing.

2. Drink only when greatly annoyed with thirst; then a mouthful of lemonade without sugar.

3. Take three times a week some form of bath in which there shall be immense perspiration. The Turkish bath is best. You must work, either in walking or some other way, several hours a day.

Vitality

The seeds of so many doubtless retain the same vitality for years, especially in the earth beyond the surface of its surface. Many seeds which will grow in two or three thousand years, as is often the case with mummy seeds, much room for doubt as to whether any such seeds have ever made to grow. The hear of strange plants from soil dug out of excavated canals, or out of cellars, know of a single person who has been spontaneous general sprouting of long buried plants appearing in the neighborhood of the person who dug them up. Dr. H. Hoffmann conducted a series of experiments to determine whether the soil or earth taken from ten or more feet deep in settled country, but not found any; hence we find the idea of seed in the soil for hundreds of years is a fiction whatever its origin.

If she had frankly shown any pleasure in the costly gifts Lord de Gretton heaped upon her, or any interest in the brilliant future opening out before her, he would simply have scorned and forgotten her. Had she made any struggle to escape her quickly-coming doom, he would have helped her as far as in him lay. But she did neither. The gifts moved her to no more interest or gratitude than an idol shows when such are laid upon his shrine, and she gave no sign of shrinking even when they fixed the wedding-day. ### Economical Paint.

A paint for floors, which economizes the use of oil colors and varnish, is described at much length in the Builder, as a recent German invention. For flooring, two and one-eighth ounces of good, clear, joiners' glue is soaked over night in cold water, and, when dissolved, is added, while being stirred, to thickish milk of lime, heated to the boiling point, and prepared from one pound of quick lime. Into boiling lime is poured—the stirring being continued—as much linseed oil as becomes united, by means of saponification, with the lime, and when the oil no longer mixes there is no more poured in. If there happens to be too much oil added, it must be combined by the addition of some fresh lime paste—about half a pound of oil for the quantity of lime just named. After this white, thickish, foundation paint has cooled, a color is added which is not affected by lime, and, in case of need, the paint is diluted with water, or by the addition of a mixture of lime water with some linseed oil. The substance penetrates into the wood and renders it water-resisting.

New Rope Material.

The manufacture of rope from asbestos is, it would seem, likely to become an industry of considerable importance, being already produced as a commercial commodity in England, the strength of the article being estimated at about one-fourth that of ordinary hemp rope of the same diameter. Rope of this material, of one and a half inch in diameter, is stated to have a breaking strength of one ton, and twenty feet of it are calculated to represent a weight of thirteen and one-fourth pounds. Some of the purposes, as enumerated, to which this kind of rope is especially adapted are theatres, fire brigades, and ready means of escape from dwellings and public buildings—its advantage in this connection being that it will not break and drop its burden if the flame bears upon it. It is made like ordinary rope, and is spun from Italian asbestos thread.

A Winter Garden.

A correspondent of an English contemporary, speaking of the great variety and number of evergreen trees and shrubs cultivated in England, says: "One might make a very beautiful winter garden, full of warmth and color, even without flowers." This is true, not only in England, but in the United States, and it is a pity that so few farmers and others having room for growing trees about their homes ever think of the winter appearance of

A SHOCKING TRAGEDY.

Diabolical Work of a Band of Armed Men in Hot Springs, Arkansas.

A terrible tragedy was recently enacted at Hot Springs, Ark. Three brothers, Frank, Jack, and William Flynn, were proceeding home in a hack, when a party of seven men, armed with double-barreled shot-guns and Winchesters, stepped out from the door of a saloon and opened fire. The Flynns were armed, but the attack was unexpected. Jack Flynn was shot through the forehead by a ball from a Winchester rifle, and died in a few minutes. William Flynn was shot through the breast with a Winchester, and is probably fatally injured. Frank Flynn received a shot through the hand, inflicting a slight wound. Frank Hall, the driver of the hack, was shot through the back of the neck, and died an hour afterward. Robert Hargreave, a bystander, was shot through the breast, and will probably die. J. H. Craig, a prominent lumberman, received a charge of buckshot through the back; his condition is considered precarious.

The difficulty originated some weeks ago, on account of Frank Flynn endeavoring to prevent Doran from opening a gambling-house. It culminated at the time in Doran making a cowardly attempt to assassinate him, failing in which he fled the city, and returned secretly a few nights ago. Flynn was unaware of his presence in the city till the fatal volley was fired on him.

Intense excitement prevails, and there are strong threats of mobbing the prisoners. The seven men were arrested, and are now in jail. They are S. Doran, two Priutt brothers, Howell, and three others.

The citizens are loud in condemnation of the murderous and cowardly act. Judge Wood has been telegraphed to by leading citizens requesting him to adjourn court at Malvern and return here and hold a special session to try the murderers. If he consents, the law will probably be allowed to take its course. If he does not, the citizens boldly threaten to burn the jail and hang the prisoners.

Some two years ago Frank Flynn, James Lane, Charles Watson, and Louis Goodman were engaged as partners in a gambling-house. Dissensions arose, and the firm was dissolved. Lane continued the business, while Flynn and Goodman opened a rival house. Lane, jealous of its growing popularity, began to circulate rumors affecting its character. Flynn remonstrated with him and threatened to break him up unless he ceased. Lane, however, continued to circulate his reports until Flynn and Goodman closed their house. Flynn then took steps to close Lane's house, and succeeded so well as to financially ruin him. Lane left the

A Winter Garden.

A correspondent of an English contemporary, speaking of the great variety and number of evergreen trees and shrubs cultivated in England, says: "One might make a very beautiful winter garden, full of warmth and color, even without flowers." This is true, not only in England, but in the United States, and it is a pity that so few farmers and others having room for growing trees about their homes ever think of the winter appearance of their surroundings. As a rule, they are bleak, bare, and uninviting in appearance in winter, no matter how elegant or costly the dwelling or outbuildings, in consequence of the absence of the green leaves and graceful forms of evergreen trees. This need not be, because we have an abundance of evergreen trees of almost every conceivable form of growth and shade of color, that will thrive in the Northern States, where they are most needed, not only to improve the appearance of the country homes, but to shield them from the cold blasts of winter.

Vitality of Seeds.

The seeds of some kinds of plants doubtless retain their vitality for many years, especially when buried in the earth beyond the ever varying temperature of its surface. But that there are any seeds which will remain sound for two or three thousand years under any conditions, as is often claimed for the so-called mummy wheat, there is at least much room for doubt, and there is no proof that any such long preserved grain was ever made to germinate. We often hear of strange plants springing up from soil dug out of excavations for railroads or canals, or out of cellars, but we do not know of a single instance of what some persons have been disposed to consider spontaneous generation, and others the sprouting of long buried seeds, in which the plants appearing under such conditions did not belong to some species common in the neighborhood. A few years ago Dr. H. Hoffman, of Germany conducted a series of experiments to determine whether there were any seeds in soil or earth taken from excavations made ten or more feet deep in an old and long settled country, but he utterly failed to find any; hence we must conclude that the idea of seed retaining their vitality for hundreds of years under any conditions whatever is not supported by facts.

Flynn remonstrated with him and threatened to break him up unless he ceased. Lane, however, continued to circulate his reports until Flynn and Goodman closed their house. Flynn then took steps to close Lane's house, and succeeded so well as to financially ruin him. Lane left the city and went to New York, still retaining his interest here. About six months ago he returned and openly boasted that he would soon have a man here who would open his house or would have Flynn's blood. It was soon discovered that this man was one S. Alex. Dean, a man whose record has been one of blood and crime in Tennessee, in Texas, and elsewhere. He has killed several men. Doran arrived here some moths ago, penniless. It was known to Flynn that he was desperate. Doran, with two brothers, opened a gambling-house. Flynn, through legal measures, endeavored to suppress it. A few days afterward Doran met Flynn, and without a word drew a pistol and began to shoot. Flynn's right arm was crippled, and he retreated to a neighboring store. An officer interfered and both parties were arrested. Subsequently Flynn was placed under a peace bond of $5,000. Doran left the city and returned surreptitiously Tuesday, accompanied by two or three companions. His presence has been kept concealed. Flynn was unaware of his presence until the fatal volley was poured in. As soon as the hack was fired into, Frank and William Flynn jumped from the vehicle, and opened fire on their assailants, but without affect. The names of the prisoners now confined in jail are S. A. Doran, David and Robert Pruitt, Harry Lanning, Ed. Howell, J. Lucius, and John Allison. The excitement is still intense.

The most recent authority on white elephants, Mr. Carl Bock, tells us that the sanctity of a white elephant dates from the earliest period of Buddhist history. One of the proudest titles of the King of Siam is "Lord of the White Elephant." Not very long ago a real white elephant, who excelled all his fellows in beauty, was brought into Bangkok with all the pomp and ceremony of an emperor. According to Mr. Bock, he was quite an albino, the whole body being of a pale reddish-brown color, with a few white hairs on the back. The iris of the eye, the color of which is held to be a good test of an albino, was a pale Naples yellow. He was blessed and baptized in the presence of the King and the nobility. One of the high priests presented him with a piece of sugar cane, on which was written the elephant's name in full, and which he very readily ate. The following is a translation of his description, painted on a red tablet, hung over one of the pillars of his stall: "An elephant of beautiful color; hair, nails, and eyes are white. Perfection in form, with all signs of regularity of the high family. The color of the skin is that of lotus. A descendant of the angels of the Brahmins. Acquired as property by the power and glory of the King for his service. Is equal to the crystal of the highest value. Is of the highest family of all in existence. ## SIGHTS IN HONG KONG.

Frightful Dissipation of the British Sailors—Never-Ceasing Revelry.

One of the first things I noticed upon landing in Hong-Kong was the dissipation which is always going on. At first I thought some celebration must be in progress, but upon making enquiries I was assured that such was not the case.

"It is always so," said a citizen. "Every day a certain number of sailors are allowed to come on shore, and they avail themselves fully of this privilege. As there are some two thousand of these sailors at present on board the men of war in Hong Kong harbor, this city is quite lively most of the time. It is the men aboard these war-ships who get the wildest, for the enforced idleness of their life breeds recklessness when once they get ashore.

These sailors are beardless young fellows for the most part, and though they have a swaggering and tyrannical mien, I should not think that they would impress the Chinese as very formidable. Walking about the streets last evening in company with a citizen, I saw literally hundreds of these sailors, crowding the saloons so thick that you could not see the counter. Outside of the saloon the street would be packed with rickshas, for a sailor gravitates toward a richisha the first thing upon coming ashore. He does not have to gravitate far, for the Chinese runners almost attempt the perilous feat of walking on the water in their eagerness to meet the sailors half-way.

Soon after landing the sailors gravitate toward a saloon, and numbers breeding reckless jollity, it is not long before they cease to be free moral agents. Then they curse and beat their rickisha men, and ride about with scarce any cognizance of whither they are being carried. As I have before intimated, I am implacably opposed to the Chinese; yet my indignation was kindled in their behalf at first when I witnessed the brutality with which they are treated by these sailors. But my commiseration was dissipated when my friend said:

"Don't pity them. John Chinaman is under now, but he will be on top pretty soon. Wait till the sailors get stupidly drunk, and they will be ignominiously dumped out by the wayside, while these long-suffering 'heathen Chinese' will proceed complacently to go through their pockets. Don't misplace your pity."

"Don't the English make any effort to check this evil?"

"Oh no, it is so common that they don't care to interfere. Once in a while, when a man gets to smashing things too generally and endangering people's lives, he will be locked up until he gets sober. But so long as they only injure themselves, no matter if they do break the toward a saloon, and numbers breeding reckless jollity, it is not long before they cease to be free moral agents. Then they curse and beat their rickisha men, and ride about with scarce any cognizance of whither they are being carried. As I have before intimated, I am implacably opposed to the Chinese; yet my indignation was kindled in their behalf at first when I witnessed the brutality with which they are treated by these sailors. But my commiseration was dissipated when my friend said:

"Don't pity them. John Chinaman is under now, but he will be on top pretty soon. Wait till the sailors get stupidly drunk, and they will be ignominiously dumped out by the wayside, while these long-suffering 'heathen Chinese' will proceed complacently to go through their pockets. Don't misplace your pity."

"Don't the English make any effort to check this evil?"

"Oh no, it is so common that they don't care to interfere. Once in a while, when a man gets to smashing things too generally and endangering people's lives, he will be locked up until he gets sober. But so long as they only injure themselves, no matter if they do break the peace, nothing is done about it."

I notice that very frequently, almost always, the sailors will give the order, "Go to the Temperance hall," when they are well under the "influence," and there sleep off their booze. By the way, curious though the statement may seem, the manager of the Hong Kong institution is getting to be a confirmed sot. He has been inebriated now for a full week. The moral sentiment that will tolerate such a thing puzzles me.

Despite all the abuses to which they are subjected, however, these temperance halls of the Orient are institutions, and really do a great deal of good. They may be found in Shenehai, Honk Kong, Singapore, Madras, Bombay, Calcutta, Yokohama, Kobe, and, for aught I know, in all the cities of the far east. For $1.25 a day sailors and travellers who want to economize are entertained in first class style, and at the end of the year the citizens make up the deficit in running expenses.

The bargain was made, and the runaway continued his flight in safety.

He bought a ticket, spent what little money he had, lost track of his chance again, and was soon in a deplorable state of poverty again. He landed at the street station on Tuesday, January 1st, the following Saturday he sought out the Sixth district station, looking over a copy of The Leader, three weeks old, which was around some cold victuals he had taken at a back gate, he ran across the name of William Anderson among the letters, and, while doubting whether it was him, he went to the postoffice to see if it was several weeks since he had been sent to his old address in Scotland. Though the number was correct, the street was given as "North Street," instead of "East Street," and the envelope for this reason was discarded: "Try Philadelphia." He then wrote this letter, from a firm of a firm in Inverness, which told Anderson of the death of his sister over a year ago, the decease of his father in law, leaving him the sole heir to the estate amounting to £6,000.

Two young fellows were coming down the alley toward the thief and myself, and might have stopp'd him at once, but they made room for him to pass, and then spread themselves out, arm in arm, to hinder me, but did not attempt any violence. I upset one of them and got past, but it gave the thief time to increase his lead, and after keeping him in sight for two or three turnings, I finally lost him in the maze of small alleys behind St. Giles' church. I found a policeman, after some trouble, near the Seven Dials, and then gave information at Bow Street Station. Of course* I have not heard anything of my chain. There is a comic side to almost all misfortunes. I have said that I only lost my chain, but I was so firmly convinced that my watch was gone also that I did not investigate the contents of my watch-pocket after the affair, but racked my brains to give an accurate description at the police-station of the old fashioned gold watch which I thought I had lost forever. My joy may be imagined when, on nearing home, from mere habit I put my hand to my watch-pocket to ascertain how near it was to dinner time, and found there, safe and sound, my dear old friend and companion. The tug had been so violent that the ring attaching the chain to the watch had given way, leaving the watch behind. The moral of all this is, not to walk about London with your coat not buttoned up."

He fished in this wise. There was a large hole through the log on which he lay, and he thrust his forearm through the hole and held his open paw in the water, and waited for the fish to gather around and into it, and when full, he clutched his fist and brought up a handful of fish, and sat and eat them with great gusto; then down with the paw again, and so on. The brook was fairly alive with little trout and red-sided suckers and some black suckers, so the old fellow let himself out on the fishes. He did not eat their heads. There was quite a pile of them on the log. I suppose the oil in his paw attracted and baited them even better than a fly hook, and his toe nails were his hooks, and sharp ones, too, and once grabbed the fish are sure to stay.

They all Knew How.

I took a large spider from his web under the basement of a mill, put him on a chip, and set him afloat on the quiet waters of the pond. He walked all about the sides of his bark, surveying the situation very carefully, and when the fact that he was really afloat and about a yard from shore seemed to be fully comprehended, he prospected for the nearest point of land. This point fairly settled upon, he immediately began to cast a web for it. He threw it as far as possible in the air and with the wind. It soon reached the shore, and made fast to the spires of grass. Then he turned himself about, and in true sailor fashion began to haul in hand over hand on his cable. Carefully he drew upon it until his bark began to move toward the shore. As it moved the faster he the faster drew upon it to keep his hawser taut and from touching the water. Very soon he reached the shore, and quickly leaping to terra firma he sped his way homeward. Thinking then that he might be a special expert, and an exception in that line of boatmanship to the rest of his companions, I tried several of them, and they all came to shore in like manner.

On that occasion, an apparition was declared to be Princess Bertha von Rosen, who had been dead some four hundred years, and who is troubled by the fact that she is the last of her family. The apparition has continued. There is a want of connection between the matter and the occupation of that is a detail which it is worth to consider. Princess Bertha appears in white, with a white sash hanging at her girdle. The "White Lady" has fewer claims on the imagination than she. She was the Countess Amalie von Brandenburgh and mother of his sons. When he became emperor she expected marriage, a grave considered her two sons to the union she poisoned this she was bricked up all the palace. Another version is that she fell in love with the prince who murdered two daughters between her and the real hopes. ## A SCOTCHMAN'S GOOD FORTUNE.

Falling Heir to a Small Fortune When in Destitute Circumstances.

Among the passengers by the American line steamer British Prince, recently, was a young Scotchman named William Anderson, who, after two years of vicissitudes in this country, returns home to claim an estate left him by his father, amounting to about $30,000. The story of Anderson's experience, as he told it to a Philadelphia Times reporter, is as follows: At the time the tidings reached him he was absolutely penniless, without a place to lay his head, hungry and half-naked. He secured the means to return home from a charitable gentleman of this city, who declines to have his name mentioned. Anderson, who is 26 years of age, left his home, near Inverness, Scotland, about the middle of January, 1882. His father was one of the many prosperous wool-growers in that vicinity, a widower with one son and one daughter. He was a straight-laced Scotch Presbyterian, and his boy William, becoming tired of the restraints put upon him and the drudgery of the work among his father's flocks, resolved to start out and see the world for himself. He made his way to Liverpool on board of a sailing vessel, arriving there, he says, with £50 in his pocket, a good portion of which had been given him by his sister, to whom he had confided his intention of seeking his fortune in America. He came to this country by the first outgoing steamer, and knocked about New York for a while, vainly endeavoring to secure work. For a time he had employment with a truckman named Bedloe, who has stables near the Bible house, but his fondness for Scotch whisky soon caused him to lose his place, and he drifted into a furniture-house on Eighteenth street, where he was employed as a porter. While there he wrote to his sister, giving his address, but soon after that he went west, and was for more than a year engaged in herding sheep in Colorado. Becoming tired of this work, he made his way back to Chicago, where he went from bad to worse, working at odd times, drinking hard, and spending many nights in the station-house. ## A MODERN RESURRECTION.

A Miracle that Took Place in our Midst Unknown to the Public—The Details in Full.

(Detroit Free Press.)

One of the most remarkable occurrences ever given to the public, which took place here in our midst, has just come to our knowledge and will undoubtedly awaken as much surprise and attract as great attention as it has already in newspaper circles. The facts are, briefly, as follows: Mr. William A. Crombie, a young man formerly residing at Birmingham, a suburb of Detroit, and now living at 287 Michigan Avenue in this city, can truthfully say that he has looked into the future world and yet returned to this. A representative of this paper has interviewed him upon this important subject and his experiences are given to the public for the first time. He said:

"I had been having most peculiar sensations for a long while. My head felt dull and heavy; my eyeright did not seem so clear as formerly; my appetite was uncertain and I was unaccountably tired. It was an effort to rise in the morning and yet I could not sleep at night. My mouth tasted badly, I had a faint all gone sensation in the pit of my stomach that food did not satisfy, while my hands and feet felt cold and clammy. I was nervous and irritable, and lost all enthusiasm. At times my head would seem to whirl and my heart palpitated terribly. I had no energy, no ambition, and I seemed indifferent of the present and thoughtless for the future. I tried to shake the feeling off and persuade myself it was simply a cold or a little malaria. But it would not go. I was determined not to give up, and so time passed along and all the while I was getting worse. It was about his time that I noticed I had begun to bloat fearfully. My limbs were swollen so that by pressing my fingers upon them deep depressions would be made. My face also began to enlarge, and continued to until I could scarcely see out of my eyes. One of my friends, describing my appearance at that time, said: 'It is an animated something, but I should like to know what.' In this condition I passed several weeks of the greatest agony.

"Finally, one Saturday night, the misery culminated. Nature could endure no more. I became irrational and apparently insensible. Cold sweat gathered on my forehead: my eyes became glazed and my throat rattled. I seemed to be in another sphere and with other surroundings. I knew nothing of what occurred around me, although I have since learned it was considered as death by those who stood by. It was to me a quiet state, and yet one of great agony. I was helpless, hopeless and pain was my only companion. I remember trying to see what was beyond me, but the mist before my eyes was too great. I tried to reason, but I had lost all power. I felt that it was death and realized how terrible it was. At last the strain upon my mind gave way and all was a blank. How long this continued I do not know, but at last I realized the presence of friends and recognized my mother.

He mislaid his ticket, spent what little money he had, lost track of his chance acquaintance, and was soon in a deplorable state of poverty again. He landed at the Broad street station on Tuesday, Jan. 22, and on the following Saturday he sought lodgings at the Sixth district station-house. In looking over a copy of The Ledger two or three weeks old, which was wrapped around some cold victuals he begged at a back gate, he ran across the name of William Anderson among the advertised letters, and, while doubting that it was for him, he went to the postoffice and applied for it. It was several weeks old and had been sent to his old address in New York. Though the number was correct, the street was given as "North Eighteenth street," instead of "East Eighteenth," and the envelope for this reason was indorsed: "Try Philadelphia." It was this letter, from a firm of attorneys at Inverness, which told Anderson of the death of his sister over a year ago and the decease of his father in December, leaving him the sole heir to the property, amounting to £6,000.

The "White Lady."

The German emperor is suffering from a slight cold, which has caused the postponement of some festivities. There would be nothing remarkable about the incident, were it not that it has already been associated with the recent appearance of the famous white lady, whose appearance in the royal castle at Berlin is regarded as a portent of misfortune—generally death—to some member of the house of Hohenzollern. An Imperial cold, accompanied by slight hoarseness, is just enough to save the lady's credit as a true prophet. Her last appearance was upon a more serious errand. On the eve of the death of Prince Waldemar, in the spring of 1879, a sentinel at the old castle was so terribly frightened by her that he fled at once to the guard-room, where he was arrested for deserting his post. On that occasion, we believe, the apparition was declared to be that of Princess Bertha von Rosenberg, who had

At last the strain upon my mind gave way and all was a blank. How long this continued I do not know, but at last I realized the presence of friends and recognized my mother. I then thought it was earth, but was not certain. I gradually regained consciousness, however, and the pain lessened. I found that my friends had, during my unconsciousness, been giving me a preparation I had never taken before, and the next day, under the influence of this treatment, the bloating began to disappear, and from that time on I steadily improved, until to-day I am as well as ever before in my life, have no traces of the terrible acute Bright's disease, which so nearly killed me, and all through the wonderful instrumentality of Warner's Safe Cure—the remedy that brought me to life after I was virtually in another world." "You have had an unusual experience. Mr. Crombie," said the writer who had been breathlessly listening to the recital, "Yes I think I have," was the reply, "and it has been a valuable lesson to me. I am certain, though, there are thousands of men and women at this very moment who have the same ailment which came so near killing me, and they do not know it. I believe kidney disease is the most deceptive trouble in the world. It comes like a thief in the night. It has no certain symptoms, but seems to attack each one differently. It is quiet, treacherous, and all the more dangerous. It is killing more people, to-day, than any one other complaint. If I had the power I would warn the entire world against it and urge them to remove it from the system before it is too late." One of the members of the firm of Whitehead & Mitchell, proprietors of the Birmingham Eccentric, paid a fraternal visit to this office yesterday, and in the course of conversation, Mr. Crombie's name was mentioned. "I knew about his sickness," said the editor, "and his remarkable recovery. I had his obituary all in type and announced in the Eccentric that he could not live until its next issue. It was certainly a most remarkable case." Rev. A. R. Bartlett, formerly pastor of the M. E. Church, at Birmingham, and now of schoolcraft, Mich., in response to a telegram, replied: "Mr. W. A. Crombie, was a member of my congregation at the time of his sickness. The prayers of the church were requested for him on two different occasions. I was with him the day he was reported by his

The German emperor is suffering from a slight cold, which has caused the postponement of some festivities. There would be nothing remarkable about the incident, were it not that it has already been associated with the recent appearance of the famous white lady, whose appearance in the royal castle at Berlin is regarded as a portent of misfortune—generally death—to some member of the house of Hohenzollern. An Imperial cold, accompanied by slight hoarseness, is just enough to save the lady's credit as a true prophet. Her last appearance was upon a more serious errand. On the eve of the death of Prince Waldemar, in the spring of 1879, a sentinel at the old castle was so terribly frightened by her that he fled at once to the guard-room, where he was arrested for deserting his post. On that occasion, we believe, the apparition was declared to be that of Princess Bertha von Rosenberg, who had been dead some four hundred years, and who is troubled by the fact that a charitable bequest of hers has been discontinued. There is a want of logical connection between the matter of the grievance and the occupation of the ghost, but that is a detail which it would be unkind to consider. Princess Bertha always appears in white, with a bunch of keys hanging at her girdle. The other "white lady" has fewer claims on our sympathy. She was the Countess Agnes, of Orlamunde, who was mistress of a margrave of Brandenburg and mother of two of his sons. When he became a widower she expected marriage, and as the margrave considered her two sons as obstacles to the union she poisoned them. For this she was bricked up alive in a vault in the palace. Another version is that she fell in love with the prince of Parma, and murdered two daughters who stood between her and the realization of her hopes. The white lady has much exercised the wits of German savants who do not altogether relish the taunt of their compatriot, that the men who have left off believing in Deity begin to believe in ghosts. At least two learned treatises have been written on the subject, and the most enlightened opinion is that the tradition is of mythological origin. The lady's name should be Bertha—or rather Berchta—meaning the bright or shining one—who was a goddess under the regime of Woden, fulfilling many of the functions of Juno Lucina, and being the especial patroness of great families. This, no doubt, is a very satisfactory account of the myth, but then what are we to say about the apparition?—London Daily News.

One of the members of the firm of Whitehead & Mitchell, proprietors of the Birmingham Eccentric, paid a fraternal visit to this office yesterday, and in the course of conversation, Mr. Crombie's name was mentioned.

"I knew about his sickness," said the editor, "and his remarkable recovery. I had his obituary all in type and announced in the Eccentric that he could not live until its next issue. It was certainly a most remarkable case."

Rev. A. R. Bartlett, formerly pastor of the M. E. Church, at Birmingham, and now of schoolcraft, Mich., in response to a telegram, replied:

"Mr. W. A. Crombie, was a member of my congregation at the time of his sickness. The prayers of the church were requested for him on two different occasions. I was with him the day he was reported by his physician as dying, and consider his recovery almost a miracle."

Not one person in a million ever comes so near death as did Mr. Crombie and then recover, but the men and women who are drifting toward the same end, are legion. To note the slightest symptoms, to realize their significance and to meet them in time by the remedy which has been shown to be most efficient, is a duty from which there can be no escape. They are fortunate who do this; they are on the sure road to death who neglect it.

London Truth gives currency to the rumor that Lord Lorne will be called up to the House of Lords by one of his father's minor titles shortly after the meeting of Parliament. The object of the Court politics appears to be his early appointment either as Viceroy of India or as Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland.

FOR THE Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs. THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver.
 To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

Napanee lodge is making large additions to its membership.

—On Sunday afternoon last as Mr. James Boyd of Richmond was driving up Dundas-st. after attending the funeral of the late Mr. Sexsmith, and while turning the corner of Dundas and John-sts. the cutter struck a heap of ashes on the road upsetting him out. The cutter afterwards righted and the horse ran away up John, Bridge and Centre-sts., homeward bound. The horse was caught north of the glass works, no damage having been done.

—Speaking of Miss Ida Van Cortland, shortly to reappear here, the Peterboro Review says:—She is one of the best of those who have visited Peterboro—the best actress who has appeared on the stage here in a long time. Her voice is clear, she pronounces her words distinctly, the inflections of the voice are carefully attended to, her actions are correct and her whole manner is natural and graceful. Miss Annie Bird almost electrified the audience with her singing and recitations and was encored three times.

—The entertainment which the Y. P. M. & L. Society intend to give in the basement of the C. M. Church this (Friday) evening, will be of more than ordinary interest. In addition to the usual first-class programme of readings, recitations and music, both vocal and instrumental, Mr. Libby and Mr. Bowerman have kindly consented to give short explanations—the former of the tides and the latter of the seasons. Dr. Ruttan also at no distant date—his professional duties admitting—will read a paper on "Atheism," of which further notice will be given.

—Builders report good prospects for the coming summer. The re-construction of the Campbell House will be a $15,000 contract; a new block is likely to be built on the corner of John and Dundas-sts.; Mr. Thos. Waller is preparing to build a brick dwelling on Dundas-st. near the academy; Mr. W. R. Aylsworth of Deseronto is to build a handsome brick residence on his farm on the Deseronto road. These together with the new dwellings to be erected by Mr. Parrot and others in contemplation will make things lively in the building line next summer.

Grange and intends erecting two thereon.

—Mr. B. Brisco has purchased W. Anderson the brick residence occupied by Mr. J. H. Downey.

Obituary.

Mr. W. B. Blakely, Provincial spectator for Prince Edward, died of dence, Cherry Valley, Monday 1 Blakely had been unwell for near but had only recently been confined house, and up to a few days ago thought to be dangerously ill. He was well and favorably known in the county. His manly, strong and genial manner made him much respected. He was a successful farmer, and a member of the Canada Methodist Church. He leaves a wife and large family. He was sixty-six years of age. He was an uncle of Messrs. Fred. and W. Blakely of Napanee, who were at the funeral on Wednesday, which they attended.

Fox Hunting.

A fox hunt was held on the ice at the steamboat dock at Deseronto on Friday afternoon last which attracted a large crowd of people. In the first race entered belonging to Messrs. R. P. O'Connor, M. Breagh, A. Barnhart and E. Lambert. The fox was captured by Mr. R. V. hound. Messrs. Alex. Smith and McCambridge acted as managers for the fox chase took place afterwards at a place, Mr. Welt Cronk of Prince County, manager. In this race entered Messrs. F. Brown, R. W. Breagh, M. Barnhart and R. M. Napanee were entered. The fox 100 yards start and after a long chase reached the shore and disappeared into a haystack. Quite a number from Deseronto attended the hunt.

Dwelling Burned.

Between 7 and 8 o'clock on Saturday last the dwelling house owned by Mr. George McGuinn of Fredericksburgh, just outside of Deseronto, was destroyed by fire. McGuinn after his day's labors went to bed, made on a fire in the stove and after which he took his horse and drove to the residence of Mr. John Clark, Clarksville, for his wife and where they were visiting and when he returned the house was ablaze. The fire was all destroyed not an article left. It is supposed the fire originated in the stovepipes or from a defective chimney. There was an insurance of $300 on the house and $50 on the contents. Mr. A.

...the audience with her singing and recitations and was encored three times.

—Dr. Grant, late of Newburgh, has taken up his abode in town for the practice of his profession. His residence is in the new Carscallen terrace on Dundas-st. The Doctor is a practitioner of wide experience, whose skill is well known in these counties.

—The leap year quadrille party held in the Town Hall on Monday evening last was a pleasant affair. About 40 couple assembled and dancing was kept up till an early hour. Supper was served at Mr. Baker's restaurant where oysters, etc., were partaken of.

—Mr. I. J. Lockwood, bookseller, has enlarged his bookstore by taking in the adjoining offices which will enable him to display his stock of wall paper, stationery, etc., to much better advantage. The "East End" bookstore is evidently, notwithstanding the depression, forging ahead.

—Mr. Chester Files has resigned the Reeveship of Newburgh because of a protest having been entered against him on the ground of insufficiency of property qualification. The new candidates are Dr. Aylsworth and Mr. T. B. Stickney, and the issue is as to whether or not a license shall be granted a billiard table in the village.

—Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Allison of Mount Pleasant celebrated their crystal wedding on Thursday evening last. A large number of invited guests was present and all enjoyed themselves in having a good social evening's entertainment. Invitations were sent to friends in town but the storm prevented a number from going.

—The ladies of St. Paul's Church, Adolphustown, are arranging for a grand dinner and concert in the Adolphustown Town Hall on Thursday next, March 6th, in aid of the proposed new Memorial Episcopal Church. They promise a thoroughly satisfying spread and an excellent programme. They extend a cordial invitation to the people of Napanee and other parts of the county to be present.

—An American stopping at one of the leading hotels one day this week was noticed comfortably seated in the sitting-room anxiously waiting for something. At 3 o'clock he coolly asked the porter if it was not time for dinner and being told dinner was over and preparations were going on for tea he remarked he had made some miscalculation in the time or got out of his latitude.

...the audience with her singing and recitations and was encored three times.

—The entertainment which the Y. P. M. & L. Society intend to give in the basement of the C. M. Church this (Friday) evening, will be of more than ordinary interest. In addition to the usual first-class programme of readings, recitations and music, both vocal and instrumental, Mr. Libby and Mr. Bowerman have kindly consented to give short explanations—the former of the tides and the latter of the seasons. Dr. Ruttan also at no distant date—his professional duties admitting—will read a paper on "Atheism," of which further notice will be given.

These together with the new dwellings to be erected by Mr. Parrot and others in contemplation will make things lively in the building line next summer.

—Mr. H. S. Rennock, who is engaged on the N. & Q. Railway, has left on exhibition in Mr. A. H. Allison's office a $100 cane. It is a great curiosity of workmanship, being almost completely covered with a large variety of animals engraved on the wood, and is well worth seeing. The work was done by an invalid of South America during his visit to the sulphur springs in Arkansas. Mr. Rennock took the cane with him to the Centennial at Philadelphia, but in all the varieties of walking sticks on exhibition there nothing could be found to compare with the workmanship of this cane.

—Mr. Burrows, Inspector of Gas for Kingston district, has opened an office in the Perry block for the purpose of inspecting consumers' meters and the quality of gas. The apparatus for inspecting the meters are now in, but that for testing the candle power of the gas have not yet arrived. Several meters have already been tested and only has been found incorrect. In most cases the percentage was in favor of the consumers. The apparatus is very interesting and is well worth inspection. Mr. Burrows informs us that the Napanee gas is of excellent quality but requires purifying. The company, acting on his advice, have purchased a purifier and it will be put in shortly. The gas company in this town owns all the meters they pay the inspection fees. The meter when inspected is good for five years. The government stamp is put on the lid and the penalty for tampering with the meter is $50. In several cases where meters were complained of by customers as too fast they were found a small percentage slow. After the inspection there will be no grounds for complaint.

—We are very glad to announce the coming of the Holman Operatic Comedy Company on Thursday evening next, March 6th. The Company has been re-organized and is now under the management of Mr. G. M. Brown of Boston, who is to take them for an extended tour through the United States. They appear here in the musical comedy of "Bubbles," a piece brimful of pure fun and music. Gems from the latest comic

Dwelling Burned.

Between 7 and 8 o'clock on Saturday last the dwelling house owned by Mr. George McGuinnis of Fredericksburgh, just outside of corporation, was destroyed by fire. McGuinnis after his day's labors went to bed and made on a fire in the stove and had after which he took his horse and drove to the residence of Mr. John Clarksville, for his wife and where they were visiting and when he returned the house was ablaze. The house was all destroyed not an article being left. It is supposed the fire originated from the stovepipes or from a defective stove. There was an insurance of $300 on the house and $50 on the contents. Mr. McGuinnis' loss is about $300—his all. He is a serious and upright mechanic and a good friend. Capt. Collier and Mr. D. C. Jennie have subscribed for his benefit which will enable Mr. McGuinnis to start life anew.

The Late Mr. P. T. Pilkey.

We lately made mention of the death of Mr. P. T. Pilkey, B.A., in Breman. The deceased was well known in this county, having prepared his college at Newburgh high school and completing a most honorable and career at Victoria University, having received the degree of Ph.D. after one year and four months' absence. He was suddenly stricken down with disease and died Jan. 21st, 1884, of inflammation of the lungs. His funeral at Breslau was a most imposing and honorable, one thousand professors, friends and others followed in the coffin, which was covered with flowers. The body encased in a beautiful shell, still covered with flowers, was taken home, and passed through Cobourg on Feb. 20th, where the students and friends did honor to the departed. On Feb. 21st a short but becoming service was held at Uxbridge. The remains were delivered by Drs. Haanel and of Victoria, and the coffin further adorned by wreaths and drapery from the members of the Science Association. Rev. A. McCann, of Iroquois, Father McCann, of St. Michael's, attended the funeral. The manner of Mr. Pilkey in Newburgh, Napanee, while pained to learn of his loss, one so promising, will be pleased that one who, at the high school, such worth and honor, at the University, won the highest honors, and in among strangers, won the respect and love of so large a number. He was short and trying, but his calm, peaceful and hopeful.

Rumors of a Wedding.

It is reported that the petite Captain Abbie Thompson will be wedded in New York on the afternoon of the great Salvation Army banquet to be attended by General Booth. The captain truthfully stated her position when she said, "I will never change my name," as the groom is declared to be Capt. Thompson, A. D. C.—Whig.

Sneak Thieves at Work.

There were some mean sneak thieves on the Bath road last Monday night. Mr. Wm. Gould, who lives about three miles from Kingston, had about 25 fine hens stolen by some parties who travelled by a horse and cutter, whose marks were traced quite easily through the snow. On enquiry at the toll gate it was learned that some parties had driven very quickly through without bells and towards the city.—[Whig.

Central Drug Store—New Firm.

We wish to inform our customers and the general public that having purchased the stock and trade of this establishment we are now receiving a complete line of new goods, including drugs, patent medicines, paints, oils, glass, putty, school books and stationery, and an excellent assortment of groceries. We will make a specialty of timothy, clover, garden, flower and field seeds, and can make it to the advantage of all to buy from us. We are also agents for the Rock Crystal Spectacles, the best in use. Just received a carload of oil cake flake and horse and cattle food fresh and cheap for cash. We invite a call from all who wish goods at bottom prices. PERRY & Co., successor to R. B. Clark, 2 doors east of Tichborne House. 16

A Belleville Elopement.

Belleville continues to make history with the traditional seven-leagued boots. Recently the good people of that fair city have passed through several surprises that the local chroniclers called "sensations." They had scarcely recovered from the excitement caused by the "hallelujah wedding" when the reported elopement of the young and handsome wife of a Sidney farmer with a Yankee vendor of patent medicines was bruited about. This made the cap-borders of every ancient dame quiver with emotion, and the younger women said, "Did you ever!" She had no family. The insinuating Yankee, it is alleged, had neither freehold nor capital. He dressed superbly, was quite handsome, and sang like a Brignoli. These qualifications captivated the blooming wife of the Sidney yeoman and won her affections. The injured husband protested, entreated, and commanded, but to no avail. Finally she left her home but returned repentant and affected a reconciliation with her husband.

operas are interpolated as well as the most popular airs of the day. The costumes are said to be magnificent and accessories complete. We bespeak for them a full house. Secure your tickets at once. They are for sale at Mr. J. J. Perry's drug store.

—The License Commissioners appointed under the McCarthy Act for the County of Prince Edward, Judge Jellett, Paul Finley McCuaig and Warden William Anderson, met in the Shire hall, Picton, on Friday last and organized. Judge Jellett was elected chairman and Mr. W. H. Orchard was appointed Inspector, Secretary and Treasurer.

—Forepaugh's great circus is to visit Ontario next summer and will no doubt take in Napanee. Adam Forepaugh burlesques Barnum by making his will and giving $22,500,000 in charities and public bequests of various kinds. Friend Alex. Jacques, familiarly known as the "Old Man," is again Mr. Forepaugh's advance agent.

Notice.

All accounts due Dr. R. B. Clark, pertaining to the drug store, must be paid at once. As the business has changed hands the affairs must of necessity be closed up immediately. Do not delay and cause trouble on both sides.

Leap Year Social.

On Tuesday evening next THE leap year social of the season will be given by the M. E. Church. Arrangements are all made and a large committee have it in charge. Tickets 10 cents. Baskets, 15 cents. Each basket will contain refreshments and a card with a lady's name, etc., etc. Come along and have a good time. There will be a short good programme.

Real Estate Changes.

—Mr. H. Sandford has purchased a lot on Water-st. from Mr. Lewis Harrison for $150.
—Mr. J. M. Parrotthas purchased the Es-son property on John-st. from Mr. Alex. Grange and intends erecting two dwellings thereon.
—Mr. B. Brisco has purchased from Mr. W. Anderson the brick residence on East-st. occupied by Mr. J. H. Downey.

Change of Firm.

Mrs. R. J. Perry has purchased the drug business of Dr. R. B. Clark and the business in future will be carried on under the style and name of Perry & Co. A complete line of new goods are now arriving and will be added to their present stock. They buy for cash and customers may depend on getting everything at bottom prices. Their motto is "small profits and quick returns," and by close attention to business and square dealings they hope to merit a large share of public patronage. Give them a call and be convinced.

Obituary.

Mr. W. B. Blakely, Provincial License Inspector for Prince Edward, died at his residence, Cherry Valley, Monday night. Mr. Blakely had been unwell for nearly a year, but had only recently been confined to his house, and up to a few days ago he was not thought to be dangerously ill. Mr. Blakely was well and favorably known throughout the county. His manly, straightforward and genial manner made him many friends. He was a successful farmer, and an energetic member of the Canada Methodist Church. He leaves a wife and large family of children. He was sixty-six years of age. Deceased was an uncle of Messrs. Fred. and Robert Blakely of Napanee, who were present at the funeral on Wednesday, which was largely attended.

Fox Hunting.

A fox hunt was held on the ice opposite the steamboat dock at Deseronto on Wednesday afternoon last which attracted a large crowd of people. In the first race six dogs entered belonging to Messrs. R. Woodcock, P. O'Connor, M. Breaugh, A. Brown, M. Barnhart and E. Lambert. The fox had 150 yards of a start and after considerable dodging was captured by Mr. R. Woodcock's hound. Messrs. Alex. Smith and Thomas McCambridge acted as managers. Another fox chase took place afterwards at the same place, Mr. Welt Cronk of Prince Edward County, manager. In this race dogs belonging to Messrs. F. Brown, R. Woodcock, M. Breaugh, M. Barnhart and R. McDonald of Napanee were entered. The fox had about 100 yards start and after a long run he reached the shore and disappeared under a haystack. Quite a number from Napanee attended the hunt.

Dwelling Burned.

Between 7 and 8 o'clock on Saturday evening last the dwelling house owned and occupied by Mr. George McGuinness, North Fredericksburgh, just outside of the town corporation, was destroyed by fire. Mr. McGuinness after his day's labors went home and made on a fire in the stove and had supper after which he took his horse and cutter and drove to the residence of Mr. John Chatterson, Clarksville, for his wife and children where they were visiting and when he returned the house was ablaze. The contents were all destroyed not an article being saved. It is supposed the fire originated either from the stovepipes or from a defective chimney. There was an insurance of $300 on the house and $50 on the contents. Mr. McGuinness' loss is about $300—his all. He is an industrious and upright mechanic and on Monday Capt. Collier and Mr. D. C. Jennings started a subscription list for his benefit. The result was the raising of a handsome sum.

—Mrs. Thos. Stapleton of Tyendinaga was in town on Tuesday visiting friends.

—Miss Mata Roblin, Miss Hogle and Messrs. Johnston and Gilbert of Bath spent Sunday in town.

—Mr. H. M. Deroche and Mr. A. L. Morden were registered at the Rossin House, Toronto, on Tuesday.

—Miss Emma Vermilyea of Belleville and Miss Nettie Clark of Shannonsville are visiting at Mr. J. S. Hulett's.

—Mr. I. W. Sproule has returned from his two months' trip to Ottawa, Montreal and Quebec, and resumed his old business.

—Mr. W. C. Scott has severed his connection with the Dominion Oddfellow. He has been succeeded by Mr. R. S. Bell, of Belleville.

—Mrs. Bradley, Miss Berryman and Mr. Warrington of Toronto, were guests of W. S. Williams, Esq., during their stay in town this week.

—Mr. Marsh Parrott, son of J. M. Parrott, Esq., County Treasurer, has returned from the North-West and contemplates embarking in business here or in Belleville.

—Miss Bristol of Napanee appeared as a "Shepherdess" at the "B" Battery mardi gras Tuesday evening. The ball was very largely attended and was a complete success.

—Mr. F. Jemmett of Renfrew, who succeeds Mr. Patterson as accountant of the Merchants' Bank here, was on Monday of last week entertained in a handsome manner by the business men and his friends of Renfrew. The chair was occupied by Mr. P. Devine and a large company surrounded the table. The proceedings are reported in the Mercury. The chairman in proposing the toast of "The Guest of the Evening" paid a high tribute to Mr. Jemmett and gave expression to the general regret expressed at his departure from the town. Mr. Morgan, manager of the Merchants' Bank, endorsed all the good that had been said of his young friend and added that the bank authorities had a high opinion of Mr. Jemmett's abilities. Mr. Jemmett made a suitable reply, which the Mercury says, afforded gleams of his native off-hand humour. A long list of toasts followed and were responded to by members of the company. In its comments the Mercury says:—"We may add that Mr. Jemmett has, from the time of his arrival in Renfrew, identified himself closely with all its social interests, manly sports, and amusements. His first appearance at a dramatic entertainment exhibited his possession of humorous talents, which have rendered his services in requisition on all similar occasions since, and have made him a favourite with the audiences."

The Late Mr. P. T. Pilkey, B.A.

We lately made mention of the death of Mr. P. T. Pilkey, B.A., in Breslau, Germany. The deceased was well known in this county, having prepared himself for college at Newburgh high school. After completing a most honorable and successful career at Victoria University, he went to Breslau University to complete the career requisite for the degree of Ph. Dr. After one year and four months' absence he was suddenly stricken down with disease and died Jan. 21st, 1884, of inflammation of the lungs. His funeral at Breslau was most imposing and honorable, one thousand students, professors, friends and others following the coffin, which was covered with garlands. The body encased in a beautiful metallic shell, still covered with flowers, was sent home, and passed through Cobourg on Feb. 20th, where the students and fraternity met to do honor to the departed. On Thursday, Feb. 21st a short but becoming memorial service was held at Uxbridge. Addresses were delivered by Drs. Haanel and Coleman, of Victoria, and the coffin further honored by wreathes and drapery from the students and members of the Science Association, was removed by six of his brethren of the association. Rev. A. McCann, of Iroquois, and Father McCann, of St. Michael's, Toronto, attended the funeral. The many friends of Mr. Pilkey in Newburgh, Wilton, and Napanee, while pained to learn of the loss of one so promising, will be pleased to learn that one who, at the high school, showed such worth and honor, at the University carried off the highest honors, and in a far land, among strangers, won the respect, esteem and love of so large a number. His sickness was short and trying, but his death was calm, peaceful and hopeful.

REPAIRING.

We are prepared to do all kinds of repairing and job work, and will spare no pains to turn out work that will give the utmost satisfaction.

Farmers having machinery to repair should see that it is done at once, as better work can be done now than in the busy harvest season. Bring in your machines at once and have them repaired, in readiness for the harvest, at the
